III. Operations.

The beginning of the new year 1981 found the Bear Aces of VAW-124 in NAVSTA Keflavik, Iceland temporarily replacing the 960th AWACS squadron. The squadron's assigned mission normally performed by the AWACS E-3A was to report any unidentified air contacts closing the Icelandic Military Adiz (MADIZ) and to vector fighter aircraft to intercept and escort Soviet Military Aircraft. VAW-124 maintained a continuous one hour alert throughout the 37 day period spent in Keflavik. During the deployment the squadron launched aircraft on nine occasions to meet alert requirements. VAW-124 aircrews detected, tracked and reported a total of six Soviet Aircraft approaching or penetrating of Icelandic airspace.

By Mid-January VAW-124 completed its turnover to the combined reserve E-2B squadrons VAW-78/88. Following a brief standdown period the Bear Aces were again working to prepare for refresher training aboard the USS NIMITZ (CVN-68). The three week "REFTRA" operations occurred in the waters off Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. There the squadron once again became part of the CVW-8/NIMITZ team. Upon returning to homeport, Norfolk, Va, VAW-124 participated in the interservice exercise "READEX 1-81". Flying a barrier off the coast of Beaufort, South Carolina, the Bear Aces were responsible for the defense of surface combatants using the Marine fighter assets from MCAS Beaufort. The designated aggressors in this situation were Marine A-6's stationed at MCAS, Cherry Point, North Carolina. The Marine F-4's were highly successful in intercepting inbound hostiles. Due to the exceptional intercept information provided, VAW-124 earned the kudos and respect from the Marine Fighter Airwing.

The beginning of May was highlighted by the Change of Command ceremonies in which CDR H. C. FORTENBERRY relieved CDR L. N. ODEN as CO. The squadron was given the opportunity to adjust to the new administration at sea aboard the USS NIMITZ for TYT I, TYT II, TYT III and ORE. The six week evaluation period, conducted in VACAPES and Puerto Rico OPAREA, provided the Bear Aces with one of the most demanding and successful flying schedules ever undertaken by an E-2 squadron. The Bear Aces established new fleet records for E-2 Monthly Flight Hours (457.5) and CV Landings (124), while topping previous ORE Sortie and Flight Hour Records by launching 30 Sorties for 118 Hours of coverage. Returning to Norfolk the squadron dedicated much of July to lengthy pre-Cruise preparations. While inport VAW-124 celebrated 10 years of accident free flying. Refresher Carrier Qualifications in the VACAPES capped off the month.

In August VAW-124 once again picked up the pace as the USS NIMITZ pulled away from Pier 12 Norfolk to begin the 1981-1982 Mediterranean Cruise. Soon after passing through the Straits of Gibraltar the Bear Aces were occupied with PASSEX a joint exercise involving USS FORRESTAL (CV-59). VAW-124 was tasked to coordinate and control a war-at-sea (WAS) or quick reaction strike (QRS) against the FORRESTAL battle group during one cycle, and then to provide AEW and CAP control in protection of the NIMITZ battle group on the next cycle. Taking full advantage of link communication, VAW-124 was able to routinely put an entire strike group on target, on time, with minimal voice transmission. During the later part of August the Bear Aces along with the VAW-125 "Tigertails" provided AEW, CAP and SSSC control for the first major OOM in the Gulf of Sidra in nearly two years. While conducting this exercise the Bear Aces controlled all F-14 intercepts of Libyan aircraft which penetrated the USS NIMITZ AAW area. It was during one of these routine E-2 controlled intercepts that two NIMITZ F-14's responding to an overt hostile act, shot down a pair of Libyan SU-22 Fitters.

Following a 10-day port visit to Naples, Italy, the USS NIMITZ returned to the Western Mediterranean. September was devoted primarily to refining SSSC/WAS skills working with the USS MISSISSIPPI, USS TEXAS and half a dozen other surface combatants. VAW-124 provided the necessary air control to conduct air-to-air and surface-to-air MISSILEX/GUNEX at the SALTO Range.

In late September the USS NIMITZ made two brief visits to Tunis and Naples and then set sail to the Eastern Mediterranean for exercise Display Determination. The basic aim of the exercise was to demonstrate NATO capability to defend and reinforce the southern region by exercising Naval ground, ground air and amphibious forces. Bear Ace controllers working with the armed forces of four NATO allies, provided the coordination necessary to complete amphibious assaults, antisubmarine warfare and close-air support.

The October port visit to Venice was cut short when USS NIMITZ was called to the North of Egypt in response to military and political tensions precipitated by the assassination of President Anwar Sadat. VAW-124 concentrated its attention on the airborne threat. The E-2 barrier was established to gain maximum detection and provide deterrence against any aggressive action.

In November the squadron enjoyed a well earned Mid-Cruise Standdown in Naples. Following the standdown, the USS NIMITZ returned to the Western Med for operation "Bright Star" and "ILES D'OR". During "Bright Star" VAW-124 provided escort services for several Air Force transports containing the Rapid Deployment Force bound for the deserts of Egypt. Operation "ISLE D'OR", a French exercise involving ASW, air and surface forces of six different countries commenced 16 November. VAW-124 worked directly with CVW-8 aircraft and the French Carrier CLEMENCEAU based F-8's and Super Entendards. The Bear Aces earned the respect and recognition of the French Navy for the superior air control services provided during the exercise.

The tempo of operations slowed down for the Bear Aces in December. The first half of the month was spent visiting the ports of Livorno, Italy and Haifa, Israel. The highlight of the month occurred shortly after the Haifa, Israel port visit when VAW-124 played host to a group of officials from the Egyptian Ministry of Defense. A short E-2C capabilities briefing was followed by a "FAM Flight" for two Egyptian Flag Officers which terminated at Cairo West Airport. The NIMITZ then returned to Naples where the Bear Aces enjoyed the Christmas Holidays.
