

One of Uncle Sam's hounds of the high seas firing a night salvo.

Photo Central News Service.

Frederick C. Penfield, recently Ambassador to Austria-Hungary, arrives safely in New York, after being called home by the Administration.

Photo © International Film Service.

Lieutenant J. G. Colgan, of the Princeton Aviation School, explaining the airplane to three pupils (left to right), L. C. Holden, Jr., H. M. Smith, and B. H. Bostick. The school is being directed by Marshall Mills, an alumnus and aviator.

Photo © American Press Association.

A railway bridge in Gorizia as it was left by the retreating Austrians, who blew it up before the Italian approach.

Photo A. Turchiani.

Some units of the American fleet docked at Charlestown, Mass., Navy Yard. In the foreground one of the latest submarine-chaser types, further back a squadron of submersibles, and to the back three battleships and a supply ship.

Photo © International Film Service.

Guarding Paris's most important observation and wireless station, the Eiffel Tower. Stretched across the street is the high iron fence which keeps intruders several blocks away from the structure.

Photo Kadd & Herbert.