See Howe to Stephens, 23 Nov., NDAR 10: 584. Howe called him lieutenant in this letter because that promotion had not yet been confirmed by the Lords of the Admiralty, who did so on 10 Feb. 1779. Watt's command of Sulphur was of short duration as he was medically invalided to England in Sept. 1778. See UKLPR, Adm. 1/489, fol. 91. O'Hara's promotion to commander was likewise approved on 10 Feb. 1779 and he too commanded his fire ship only a short time, leaving Volcano on 6 Oct. 1778. See UKLPR, Adm. 51/4385, p. 8b.

CAPTAIN SAMUEL SMEDLEY TO GOVERNOR JONATHAN TRUMBULL OF CONNECTICUT

Boston August 3^d 1778Hon^d. Sir

I am to inform Your Excellency of the Ship Defences arrival into this Port, after a Cruise from Charlestown¹ of about four weeks not so successful as I could wish, but the Ship being so very foul (it being more than eight months since she was cleaned) obliged me to come into Port—The Authority of Charlestown would not permit me to lay my Ship on Shore, but obliged me to perform quarantine at the Harbours mouth, on account of my having had the Smallpox on board during the Cruize. They would not suffer the Ship to go up to Charlestown notwithstanding the repeated promises I had of being permitted every week—Could I have gone up to Charlestown, the Ship might have been compleatly fitted for the Sea, which was my entire view in going into that place: But after waiting week after week without any prospect of being in the end suffered to go on with cleaning my Ship, I was obliged to put the Ship into the best condition my bad situation would allow, and proceed to Sea—After this was done I received intelligence from the Governor of there being three Privateers cruising on the Coast, which greatly annoyed them- with his desire that I would proceed immediately after that; which I accordingly did, and had the fortune to fall in with them, two of which I soon captured—the other made off while they were securing the Prisoners on board—The next day I got safe with them into Charlestown with a large Bermudian Sloop of twelve Guns and 72 men, and a Sloop of eight Guns & 36 men—² The Prisoners I delivered to authority—The Vessels I delivered to M^r. Rose, who will transmit to your Excellency a particular account of the whole—My Clerk, M^r. Wasson will be able to answer any particular enquiries Your Excellency pleases to make—My Peoples times are out. They will expect their wages and discharge. We have an Account by a Gentleman just arrived from the Eastward, that on the 23d of last Month the Gage Sloop of 14 Guns, (late belonging to Dr. Gardner of Kennebec)¹ commanded by Charles Callahan,² and the Sloop How,³ commanded by ———— Allen, both fitted out at Halifax, came into Cramberry Islands,⁴ and there got Intelligence that a Number of Officers who lately escaped from Halifax had been there, and they supposed had gone to Naskeag;⁵ the sloops went there and demanded these Men; but were informed by the Militia Officer who commands there, that they were not there; that had they been, they should not have them: On which they fired from the Sloops, & landed between 40 and 50 Men, and were opposed by seven only, who were fortunate enough to kill one, and wound three very dangerously.—— Before they left Naskeag, they burned 6 Houses and 6 Barns, and kill'd and carried off between 16 & 20 Head of Cattle. The next Day they went to Robenson's Island,⁶ from whence they took some Sheep. They then proceeded up Aggamoggen Reach,⁷ took a Number of Fishermen and 3 Sloops, loaded at Penobscot, and carried them with them to the Eastward on the 24th in the Evening after releasing all the Fishermen.

[Translation]

Sir,

Permit me to report to you, My General, the reasons that have engaged me to keep the position I am in. Anchored about three miles up the river, the *Alcmène*¹ several cables to the south, the brig² in the middle, I believe myself in range to intercept everything that may enter during the day. At night, the Alcmène's boat goes ahead alongside the mouth, and mine goes up, remaining, however, within range of rejoining at the least alert. Several American boats run along the two shores, and I have arranged with General Cornell³ signals so that they cannot disturb us nor be disturbed by us. I am here well within range to observe the only camp that the enemy has on this side, and well within range of two small springs and of the woods that are completely up to the shore, besides not knowing at all the place where the landing is intended, I had thought to disturb the enemy above and below the river but it seems to me that they are very little worried about it, and it also appears to me that it would be very difficult for them to take precautions everywhere where the ground is ready for a false landing of troops on the very commodious beaches, since one does not stay at sea, a ground very exposed, not at all dominated or at the least from very far, a few small hills on the verge of the sea with some beaches alongside, which facilitate establishing a frigate on each side and the boats can take station under the shelter of the hill to run ashore. The frigates can approach at least to two cable lengths. There now, My General, is plenty of a naval officer's anxious indulgence. I do not know what Gen. Sullivan⁴ will think of it; I shall conform myself to his suggestions, according to your orders. . . . I have the honor to be [&c.]

MAJOR GENERAL SIR ROBERT PIGOT TO GENERAL SIR HENRY CLINTON

Sir

Newport 3^d August 1778.

Last night & the Night before I had the honor of writing to you, and acquainted Your Excellency with the Situation we were in, and what we could learn of that of the Rebels and the French.¹ I hope one or other of those Accounts You have received. This morning I had the pleasure of Your Excellency's Letter of the 29th- and an hour afterwards arrived a Naval Officer from Lord Howe with Dispatches.² Since I wrote Yesterday, Two Armed Brigs have arrived in the Seconnet along side the French Frigates, full of men; the Officers could not tell whether they were Rebels or French, Soldiers or Sailors. The Brigs continue with the Frigates, but the Men are either put on board the Frigates or landed; Yesterday and today a great number of small Vessels & Two Ships supposed to be rebel Frigates, went up the Narraganset Passage from Sea towards Providence, supposed to be full of Men, but they were at too great a distance to discover any thing particular. About two Hundred French Marines were seen today ashore on Conanicut, and a number of Men about the Dumplins. It is thought to be a working party. We shall make the Signal You desire on the high ground near the place You desire. and if in my power will execute the rest You recommend. If the French Fleet comes into the Harbour, the Seconnet passage will be open. We are making a Redoubt to secure the Gorge from Brenton's Neck, shou'd a landing be made there. In my last I told you that the People I had made Prisoners acquainted me that the Rebels would be ready by Wednesday or thursday at farthest. That three different landings were intended: From Bristol, from the Seconnet, and from the Fleet & Shore at the South End or in the Harbour. We are preparing against every event.³ All the Cattle and Teams are drove in.⁴ The Out Posts will continue till the last moment, & have Orders not to retreat till the Fleet enter the Harbour or a landing is attempted. We will make our Front as strong as we can. Should they raise Batteries against us, it will take time; if they make a sudden Attack, I hope we shall defend ourselves well. The Troops are healthy and in good Spirits, shall have all the Encouragement I can give them to maintain their Ground to the last. We have secured most of our provisions & Ammunition; and I don't know that any thing is wanting. Three Frigates are gone to the North End of the Island.⁵ I don't think the French will venture after them least they may want their Assistance when absent. I have the honour to be [&c.]

CAPTAIN JOHN BRISBANE, R.N., TO VICE ADMIRAL VISCOUNT HOWE

Copy.
My Lord,

Flora Newport
August 3^d. 1778.

I have just now the Honor of both Your Lordship’s Letters of the 29th. & 30th. July by Mess^{rs}. Furnival and Jann,¹ who arrived within two Hours of each other; and beg leave to acquaint you the Force under my direction has been employed, from time to time, as the General² has desired; and was drawn into the Inner Harbor except the Cerberus, who was lying between Pest Island and the Blue Rocks to stop that Passage:³ But on receiving your Lordship’s Dispatches, they have proceeded up the Middle Channel again: The Lark off Arnold’s point; The Orpheus off Dyer’s Island, the Cerberus below it; agreeable to the General’s desire.⁴

As to the time the Garrison may be able to sustain the Attempts of the Enemy; Is, the General says, very uncertain, and depends upon the Numbers they throw in— With respect to the nature of their hostile Operations; There are two Ships of the Line up the Naraganset Passage; Two Frigates, a large Brig and two Sloops in the Seconnet;⁵ The rest consisting of Ten Sail of the Line and one Frigate are still at Anchor without any form, between Churche’s Point, (which forms the West Side of Easton’s Beach) and Brenton’s Reef, the Southmost at about 5 Miles Distance from the Island; The other Frigate is supposed to be Cruizing off Montock Point.

This Morning I caused five Transports to [be] sunk in the passage between Goat Island, and the Blue Rocks, to prevent the Approach of the Enemy too near the North Battery, so as to attack it with Advantage. And Five more Transports are proceeding out, in order to be sunk between Goat Island and Rose Island for the same Purpose.⁶

The moment I am convinced your Lordship is off; I will use every possible means to get a Boat with an Officer to You.

Mess^{rs}. Furnival and Jann were both chased by the small Vessels; the former escaped and got his Sloop safe in; the latter ran on Shore on Easton’s Beach.

I think it proper to acquaint Your Lordship the following is the Signal settled between Gen[eral] Clinton and General Pigot.

If an English Fleet appears off; the Enemy being in the Port, You are to hoist an English Red Ensign on Beaver’s Tail, if not in possession of that Ground, on Castle point.

I have dispatched this by M^r. Jann in a Whale-Boat to your Lordship. I have the Honor [&c.]

It is impossible at present, the Winds hanging so much to the Southward, for a Sailing Vessel to get out; & the Mouth of the Harbour so Vigilantly guarded: but should there be any opportunity, I shall embrace it, and dispatch Furnival.

The sloops remain unidentified.

6. The exact number of transports sunk remains unknown. British, American, and French sources generally place the number at 10 or 11. The Boston-Gazette reported on 17 Aug. that the British had sunk 11 transports. Besides the number of transports sunk this day, another set was sunk on 8 Aug. A modern list compiled from various British records enumerates the following twelve transports thought to have been sunk by the British in Newport in August 1778: Betty, Master Thos. Long; Bristol, Master William McArthur; Britannia, Master J. Trousdale; Earl of Oxford, Master Jas. Johnson; Good Intent, Master Jn. DIARY OF CAPTAIN FREDERICK MACKENZIE, BRITISH ARMY

[Extract]

[Newport, R.I.]

3rd Aug^t [1778]

Two small tenders arrived at 4 this Morning from New York with dispatches from Lord Howe, and Sir Henry Clinton, dated 30th & 31st July. One of the Tenders ran through the French fleet and got safe into the harbour; the other also ran through them, but was fired at and chaced, which obliged the Officer Commanding her, to run her on shore near Castle-hill, Brenton's neck, from whence he got safe to Newport with the letters.¹ It appears by these dispatches, that Lord Howe, having been joined by The Cornwall of 74 Guns, one of Admiral Byron's fleet, and by The Raisnable and Centurion from Halifax, thinks himself of sufficient force to attack the French fleet, whose situation off this Island he is perfectly informed of;² and therefore he and General Clinton assure General Pigot of immediate assistance. The Officers who came from New York say, that Lord Howe's fleet was warping out from Sandy hook on the 31st July; and as it is supposed they all got out, and were under sail yesterday Evening, we may soon expect to see them in the Offing.³ This intelligence has given us all fresh spirits, and we are now in expectation of seeing the French fleet beaten, and the hopes of the Rebels destroyed.

The French sent in some boats in order to destroy the dispatch vessel which was run ashore, but the people on board her, waiting 'till they came near, gave them a Volley of small arms, and some Swivels, which obliged them to sheer off with some loss.

At 8 this morning, the small vessels which anchored yesterday near the French ships in the Narraganset, got under way, and stood up behind Prudence, and by Warwick point into Providence River, where they arrived and anchored about 2. They consist of two Ships, two Brigs, a Schooner, and two large sloops. The ships appear to be of some force, and probably are Privateers, with some prizes they have lately taken.

Several small Sloops have been observed yesterday and this day, going from Bristol and Warren towards Providence.

In consequence of the accounts received this morning, and the probability there is, that the French ships in the Narraganset, will go out the first fair wind, and join their Fleet; it has been determined that The Frigates which had gone towards the Town, should resume their Stations on the West side of this Island, in order to cut off the Communication between the Narraganset shore, and Bristol, as well as to protect the West side from the attempts of Privateers & small parties; and also to shew the Rebels that they still have something to apprehend from our ships, notwithstanding the situation of the French Fleet. In pursuance of these orders, The Lark, Orpheus, & Cerberus, with the Pigot Galley came up from Newport, and anchored on the W. side; The Lark and Pigot off Freeborn's Creek; The Orpheus above, and The Cerberus below Dyer's Island.⁴ . . .

Mackenzie, Diary 2: 327–28. Three paragraphs regarding British troops movements omitted.

1. For more on the arrival of these officers with letters, see Brisbane to Howe, this date, above.

2. H.M.S. Cornwall, Capt. Timothy Edwards, commanding, H.M.S. Raisnable, Capt. Thomas Fitzherbert, commanding, and H.M.S. Centurion, Capt. Richard Braithwaite, commanding. As seen in his letter to Philip Stephens of 17 Aug., even with these additions Viscount Howe did not believe his squadron was as powerful as that of comte d'Estaing; UKLPR, Adm. 1/488, fols. 314–18.

VICE-AMIRAL COMTE D'ESTAING TO GENERAL GEORGE WASHINGTON

Monsieur

Il est Bien difficile de se Consoler des obstacles aussi multipliés qu'insurmontables qui mont arrêté a Sandy-hook. L'importance de new-york le Bonheur de Combattre La flotte Anglaise, et L'extreme satisfaction d'agir directement avec Vous me fesaient desirer avec la plus Grande ardeur la possibilité de passer. J'ai offert trop inutilement dans L'assemblée de Vos pilotes pratiques, une recompense de cinquante mille ecus a celui qui nous a trouverait assés d'eau. Ce n'est quen agissant que mes regrets peuvent diminues, et nous ne fesons Rien Encore; votre prevoyance, et vos ordres ont Cependant prevenu les besoins, et Rendu les Retards moins longs; le renfort que vous Envoyés si a propos, dont a ce qu'on dit arrives ce soir,¹ et ce sera très assurément du parte que Vous avez si sagement, et si promptement pris que dependra le succès.

Monsieur le General Sullivan ma fait l'honneur de me venir Voir, et de me communiquer ses vûes, je le seconderai de tout mon pouvoir. il est rempli de cet Esprit d'activité et de Combinaison, que vous inspirés a tous Ceux qui ont servi sous Vos ordres;² Je le crois aussi persuadé que nous le sommes de la nécessité d'agir, les Retranchemens que l'on peut voir de dessus Cononikut sacroissent Chaque jour. ils sont nombreux. le tems quil y a que je suis a la mer, commence à me faire perdre Beaucoup d'hommes par le Scorbut. l'extreme difficulté de faire de Leau a Shrewsbury³ et la lenteur avec laquelle on en Rassemble ici de differens endroits, m'ont forcé de nous Retranches l'eau depuis Longtems. Les officiers et les equipages supportent avec courage et patience cette terrible privation ; et nous avons acquis une vertu qu'on nous Refusait, la perseverance. nous la devons surement a l'espoir flatteur d'être utiles a des alliés que nôtre Gout national s'était donné de lui-même, avant que les ordres du Rois ne Leussent prescrit.

Messieurs vos officiers Generaux saquiteront mieux que moy du devoir de vous Rendre compte de l'etat Certain des preparatifs, et de la petite Brullure de trois Batimens Anglais qui Gardaient le Chenal de L'Est.⁴ Je me bornerai monsieur a vous Repeter, ce que je ne puis pas Bien vous dépeindre, c'est le Zele, et les soins infiniment utiles que se donne Monsieur le Lieutenant Colonel Laurens. il court des vingt quatre heures Entiers de suite pour nous procurer des adoucissements; et ensuite il Reste a bord pendant des jours tres longs, avec toute la patience d'un antique marin. nous lui Devons d'avoir un hopital etabli a terre, et d'être débarassé do nos prisoniers, ce qui dans notre situation forme deux articles importans.⁵

Je desire fort que l'expedition actuelle soit promptement terminée, pour m'occuper des moyens de purger le sound des Batimens anglais qui en gênent la navigation. J'ai reçu Monsieur le Colonel Sears avec toute La Consideration, et toute la Confiance que meritent Aux que Vous Voulés Bien m'envoyer, et lorsqu'il En sera tems Je le consulterai avec le plus grand Empressement.⁶

P.S.

Depuis ma lettre Ecrite, Je recois, Monsieur, celle que Vous avés la Bonté de m'adresser le 26 de Juillet, par Monsieur le major General Green. Je Vais aller le Chercher a terre, pour qu'il ne perde pas des instans bien pretieux. la Reputation de cet officier Général, fesoit souhaiter son arivée. son influence sur ses Compatriotes, et la connaissance des lieux, le Rendra Redoutable pour nos ennemis Communs; vous savés devenir tout Ce que nous faut, et la connaissance, et Lemploy des hommes propres a la chose, est d'après ce que je vois une des qualités qui composent un caractere aussi illustre que le Vôtre: c'est peutêtre la partie la plus importante de celui d'un grand Général.⁷

[Contemporary Translation]

At sea the 3. of August 1778.

It is difficult to console ones self for the obstacles as numerous as insurmountable which stopped me at Sandy-Hook. The importance of New York, the happiness of fighting the English fleet and the extreme satisfaction of acting directly with you made me desire with the greatest ardor the possibility of entring. I offered, to too little purpose, in an Assembly of your experienced pilots a recompense of fifty thousand crowns, to him who should find us a sufficiency of water. Tis only by action, that my regret can be diminished, and as yet we do nothing—your foresight and your orders have nevertheless, anticipated my wants and rendered my delays less long. The reinforcement you have so properly sent, will, as I am informed, arrive this evening;¹ and it will most assuredly be on the part you have so wisely and expeditiously taken, that our success will depend.

General Sullivan has done me the honor to come and see me and to communicate his views; I will second them with all my power. He is full of that spirit of activity and combination with which you inspire all those who have served under your orders—² I believe him as fully persuaded as I am of the necessity of acting. The intrenchments that are visible above Conanicut increase dayly; they are numerous. The time I have been at sea begins to make me lose a number of men with the scurvy. The extreme difficulty of procuring water at Shrewsbury,³ and the tardiness with which it is collected here from different places, have long since obliged me to retrench our allowance. The officers and men support this terrible privation with courage and patience; and we have acquired a virtue which has been hitherto refused us—the virtue of perseverance. We doub[t]less owe it to the flattering hope of being useful to allies whom our national taste had itself given us, before the orders of the king had prescribed it.

The Gentlemen, your Generals, will acquit themselves better than I, of the duty, of rendering you an account of the certain state of the preparations going on, and of the small burning of three English vessels, which guarded the Eastern channel.⁴ I will confine myself to repeating to you what I cannot well describe,—the zeal and the infinite pains of Lieutenant Colonel Laurens. He is on the wing the four and twenty hours round, to procure us refreshments; and when this is done, remains on board during very long days, with all the patience of an old sailor. We are indebted to him for a hospital established on shore and for disembarassing us of our prisoners; which in our situation form two important articles.⁵

I desire much that the present expedition may be speedily terminated, to give me leisure to employ myself with purging the Sound of the English Vessels which now infest the navigation. I have received Col: Sears, with all the consideration and all the confidence, which those merit, whom you are pleased to send me, and when it shall be time for it, I will consult him with the greatest eagerness⁶

Accept the homage of the attachment & respect with which I have the honor to be—Sir—

P.S: Since writing my letter, I received that which you had the goodness to address me the 26 of July, by Major General Greene—I am going to look for him on shore, that he may not lose any of the present precious moments. The reputation of this General Officer made his arrival to be wished. His influence on his countrymen and his knowledge of the country will render him formidable to our common enemy. You know how to divine whatever we stand in need of; and from what I have seen, the discerning and employing men proper to the business in hand, seem to be one of the qualities which compose the illustrious character you bear.- This is perhaps the most important part of the Great General.⁷

VICE-AMIRAL COMTE D'ESTAING TO MAJOR GENERAL JOHN SULLIVAN

Monsieur

La lettre que Votre Excellence m'a fait l'honneur de m'ecrire, ma été remise,¹ et j'ai appris avec grand plaisir la prochaine arrivée du detachment de L'armée. il faut, à la Guerre, être préparé a tout evenement, et soit qu'il ne Vienne point de Renfort deurope à nos Ennemies, ou qu'il leur en arrive, je tacherai detre le plus utile qu'il me sera possible à La cause Commune. chaque instant passé sans que j'agisse, est un mal de moins pour les Anglais, et malheureusement lorsque le sejour de la mer se prolonge à un certain point, les derniers têmes multiplient Les scorbutiques au point qu'un long Repos devient malheureusement indispensable.

M^r Le Lieutenant Colonel Laurens ont déjà produit un hopital, et la reception de nos prisonniers.² nous attendons avec confiance les autres objets que Vous daignés m'anoncer; malheureusement le difficultés de faire De Leau ne s'aplanissent pas, et Les legumes manquent absolument.

Les fregattes De L'est executeront ponctuellement vos ordres;³ Je vous supplie de Les leur faire passer assés a têmes pour qu'aucun obstacle maritime ne puisse suspendre ou retarder les mouvemens que vous leurs prescires: la mer exige qu'on y commence ses operations avant le moment designé, parceque les vents les plus Reglés manquent quelquefois de parole.

Je ne suis point, Monsieur Louangeur Sur mon metier, et Je vous assure que les applaudissemens que J'ai donné a vôtre plan Mont été dictés par la Verité; les observations que vous me permittés de vous faire me seront inspirés par le desir de contribuer a votre gloire et au succès de la Cause commune, J'ai l'honneur detre [&c.]

At sea 3 August 1778.

Sir

The letter your Excellency did me the honor of writing me has been delivered,¹ and I have learned with great pleasure of the next arrival of the detachment of the army; one must, in war, be prepared for every event; And let it be that no reinforcement at all comes from Europe to our Enemies or that they do arrive for them, I shall try to be the most useful that I can possibly be, to the common cause. Every instant that passes without my acting is a lesser evil for the English; And unhappily when the sojourn at sea was prolonged to a certain point, the excessive time multiplied the Scurvy, to the point that a long rest becomes unhappily indispensable.

Your orders, Sir, the manner in which they are executed and the active supervision of M. the Lieutenant-Colonel Laurens, have already produced a hospital and the reception of our prisoners.² We await with confidence the other objects that you deign to announce to me. Unhappily, the difficulties of watering have not been removed and vegetables are completely lacking.

The frigates in the east will punctually execute your orders.³ I beg you to send them to them in sufficient time so that no maritime obstacle can suspend or retard the movements that you prescribe to them. The sea Requires that one begin operations in it before the designated moment, because the most regular winds sometimes fail to keep their word.

I am not at all, Sir, a flatterer in my profession and I assure you that the applause that I have given to your plan has been dictated to me by the truth. The observations that you permit me to make to you will be inspired by the desire of contributing to your glory and to the Success of the common cause. I have the honor to be [&c]

Sir, the arrival of M. the Major General Green¹ is, according to what I have understood said of him, an Important aid. You have done more than anyone to make known what an Excellent general officer [he is] besides, worth often more than several battalions. I am going ashore in order to save the Monsieur Major General Green a fatiguing visit and the loss of precious time.

The Hope that your Excellency gives me of soon being in the happy and necessary case of indicating to me a Day soon is infinitely consoling. Monsieur the Major Fleury² and perhaps Monsieur the Lieutenant Colonel Laurens³ propose, I believe, to go immediately to receive your latest Instructions to communicate them to me in Writing, with all the detail of which paper can be susceptible. I am afraid that you forgot on my table a plan that I have the infidelity to keep, because a thing made by you, yourself, is too precious to conserve for its being so easily seized; but as I do not want to render myself entirely guilty and as you might have need of it, I return you a copy of it. This morning wind from the ESE, for a short time foggy, the schooner again left the port, ran several tacks, which brought it a little close to us, when it judged itself at cannon shot, it fire several shots at us, which traveled only half the distance, but I did not respond to it.

The *Zelé*¹ set sail, chased it, and joined an American brig of 16 guns, which told him that at 66° of longitude, and 39 of latitude it had encountered an English snow of 14 guns, which defended itself for 4 hours but which finally was obliged to strike, that the officer who commanded it had thrown some packets into the sea, but that in the private letters were found that the government had sent several ships to deliver its orders to the generals, those orders being to make peace with the Americans at whatever price it may be, and to send back to England the ships of the line and the troops; these letters were dated from the month of April.² In the evening the squadron took an English sloop laden with pineapples, lemons, oranges, and tortoise, which the governor of Providence³ had sent to General Prescott who commands in Rhode Island. M. the Commander De Suffren⁴ sent one of the officers to the general⁵ to inform him that he had had burned the English frigates Orpheus, Junon, Lark of 32 guns, the Cerberus of 28, a ship of 40 serving as a prison, and two corvettes.⁶

In the afternoon, the enemy sank 9 ships in front of the city and the battery that defends it to prevent our squadron from approaching it, in a way to destroy them entirely.⁷ At 8 o'clock in the evening the general gave us orders to weigh in order to go join the Zélé, followed by the *Provence*⁸ and by the frigate, was supposed to go reconnoiter Block Island and to seize if possible an English frigate that is suspected to be the advice boat of the squadron.

At 11 o'clock I set sail, the wind at SE weak. We were at some pains to pass the reefs, and we were not able to double the lighthouse which forced me to veer around, raising the lighthouse to the NW at the distance of ½ league, the wind from SSW but too weak to dissipate the fog, the cape to the SE.

We therefore request you'll not delay or trouble yourself further on that Business." Maryland Archives 21: 176. On 7 Aug., the Council wrote Capt. James Thomas requesting that he meet with them to discuss taking Defence on a voyage to Nantz. Ibid., p. 180.

JAMES WARREN TO ELBRIDGE GERRY

[Extract]

My dear Sir

Boston Aug^t. 4th. 1778

As the signal Operations of War are again in our quarter, you may now Expect some Intelligence from your Friends here, and while you are Engaged in Treaty with An Ambassador of a Grat Monarch & Acting the part of a Sovereign of a great State,¹ Condescend to read with Some pleasure a Line from a Person as Obscure as I am, You have every Capital Intelligence so direct from the persons Intrusted with the Execution of the principal parts of the great Drama that it will be to Little purpose for me to tell you of the Arrival of the French Squadron before Rhode Island, &c. I shall therefore Content myself with Congratulating you on this Event which seems better Calculated to do Execution than laying before New York, and to Inform You that their Arrival has diffused A General Joy here. there seems to be a Spirit prevailing to Afford every Aid to the Expedition against Rhode Island. The Council of this State have ordered out the Men Gen^l Sullivan has requested, and I am told they turn out with alacrity in general,² besides several Companies of Volunteirs are offering themselves. One of which of 84 very respectable men from Salem are now in this Town on their way to Providence,³ so that I think we have at present every reason to Expect Success unless An English Fleet of Superiour Force should Arrive & spoil the Sport. . . . we have no foreign Intelligence, no late Arrivals from Europe nor any prizes in. I presume the Warren has before this Joined the French Squadron. the Brig^t Resistance will sail in a day or two. & the Raleigh perhaps in 10 or 14 days.⁴ to Effect even this we have been forced to make great Exertions[.]⁵ I find I must soon leave this Business & then when you return Home if you will take the pains to make a Visit to Plymouth, you shall be received with great Cordiality, by a Simple & I Assure you A very honest Farmer, who never in all his Employments got a Single Shilling from the public dishonestly. The Business of this Board is Extensive, Complicated, & as we are supplied Embarrassing & besides is too Expensive for me. my Single Board, Horsekeeping & Barber has Cost me A dollar A day more than my pay since I have been in the Office. what then is to become of our Families. it has always been my Fortune to break the Ice for Other people. I flatter myself we have done A good deal & got things in a tolerable way. I suppose Others will succeed us with good Salaries. & find a beaten Track to walk in. whoever serves you in such an Office should be paid for it. it is Mortifying to serve always for Nothing A Silly & Ungrateful Generation of people wallowing with Unmeaning dissipation, in illgotten abundance, & with all the fopperies & fooleries of high head dresses, & large Cock^d. Hatts &c. while their own Families are to be reduced by the Terms of their Service to Poverty[.] I will not detain you any longer. at this Time but only Assure You that I am with great Sincerity [&c.]

I have not paid my Compliments to M^r. Hudson who is here with Gen^l Hancocke.⁶ he lodges at his House. I should have seen him if he had lodged any where else but for many reasons I did not Incline to go there, none of my Friends mention this Gentleman to me. no doubt they have a reason for it

I forgot to mention to you an Extraordinary Step of the Board of War. In Impowering our Council to appoint some Body to receive[,] take Care off, & forward the Cloathing while Otis & Andrews were on the Spot, & Capabl[e of] doing it much better than any Body her[e] & who by their Exertions, have certainly [de]served the public thanks rather than the [Sensure?] of any public Board. the Council have Appoin[ted] M^r. Adams⁸ for his Character, History & Connections, from all which you will be Able to form A Judgment of the situation of Your Goods Imported here of a very great value, & perhaps wont won[der] if I tell you this in every part is a matter of much Speculation—

1. Warren was referring to the fact that Gerry as a delegate to Congress was dealing with the new French ambassador to the United States Conrad-Alexandre Gérard.

2. Sullivan had sent an urgent plea to the New England governors for additional troops on 22 July, before anyone knew of d'Estaing's plans to sail to Newport. The response was lukewarm. The Massachusetts Council on July 24th agreed to raise 1,000 troops, but only for fifteen days service on the grounds that "This is the time for the farmers to reap and ingather the fruits arising from their labors." Massachusetts Council to Sullivan, July 25, Sullivan Papers 2:111–12 and 112–13. Once news of d'Estaing's impending arrival became known, the Council acted with more vigor. On July 27th, it extended the term to six weeks of the original 1,000 men and agreed to raise another 2,000 men. Massachusetts Council to Sullivan, 28 July. Sullivan Papers 2:132–33.

3. On Aug. 4th, Boston merchant Ezekiel Price recorded in his diary that "a company of volunteers, consisting of the most reputable persons in Salem," marched through Boston. Ezekiel Price, "Diary," New England Historical and Genealogical Register 19: 334. It was reported that out of the roughly eighty Salem volunteers, thirty were "gentlemen" worth an average of £10,000 each. Massachusetts Spy, 13 Aug.

4. Continental Navy frigate Warren, John Burroughs Hopkins, commanding; Continental Navy brigantine Resistance, Capt. William Burke, commanding; Continental Navy frigate Raleigh, Capt. John Barry, commanding.

5. By “we,” Warren meant the Continental Navy Board of the Eastern Department.

6. That is, John Hancock. Mr. Hudson has not been further identified.

7. Pursuant to a resolution of Congress, the Massachusetts Council on 17 July appointed Samuel Fletcher to take charge of the clothing arriving from France, which the Boston merchant firm Otis & Andrews had previously handled. Both Fletcher and Otis & Andrews continued to work to move the clothing from Boston to Washington’s army. GW Papers, Rev. War Series 16: 600n.

8. “Adams” was Samuel Adams, another delegate to Congress from Massachusetts.

MAJOR GENERAL JOHN SULLIVAN TO VICE-AMIRAL COMTE D’ESTAING

MAJOR GENERAL JOHN SULLIVAN TO JEREMIAH POWELL, PRESIDENT OF THE MASSACHUSETTS COUNCIL

Dear Sir

Head Quarters Providence Aug^t 4th 1778

In a Conference with Count De Estaing he represented to me the state of his Provisions, and the Necessity there was of procuring supplies for him He has not more than twenty Days Provision on Hand and expects immediately after the Reduction of Rhode Island, to sail upon some other Expedition—

As his only Dependence, in his present Situation, is upon this country and it becomes our Duty not to let him want. I earnestly recommend that you would give Directions for collecting a Quantity of Flour and Salt Provision for that Purpose and let it be forwarded to this Place without Delay. I should be obliged to you to make me a Return of what Quantity of each you will be able to collect that I may satisfy the Count^l I have the Honor to be [&c.]

1. The return has not been found. The Massachusetts Council, later in August, attempted to help Lieutenant Georges-René Chevalier Pleville le Pelley secure flour from the County of Albany in New York for the French fleet. The Council averred that “this State is at present very destitute of said article & that it is much needed for the use of said fleet & that it is the desire of the Council that permission may be granted for the bringing of the said flour into this State.” The Massachusetts Council may have intervened because New York had placed an embargo on the shipment of breadstuffs by land, and the Continental Congress had embargoed the shipment of “wheat, flour, rye, Indian corn, rice, bread, beef, pork, bacon, live stock, and other provisions.” M-Ar, Mass. LIEUTENANT COLONEL JOHN LAURENS TO GENERAL GEORGE WASHINGTON

Sir.

Providence 4th. August 1778

I had the honor of receiving your Excellencys letter of the 27 Ult^o the day before yesterday.¹ The following is a short journal of what has passed since the date of the letter which I wrote from point Judith.²

July 25. Our situation at the point being dangerous from the facility with which the enemy might land a party in our rear and cut off our retreat, I sent the greater part of our pilots to quarter three or four miles out of the cul de sac—and reserved only a sufficient number for attending to the signals which we expected—their safety was provided for by a horse patrol of militia. A twenty gun Sloop went into Newport harbour—³

26—Rec^d. an open letter from General Sullivan for the Admiral containing his plan of operations—⁴

He informs Count d'Estaing that three entrances to Rhode Island—one East of the Island called Seakonnet or the Eastern passage in which there are 2 gallies and one small frigate.—Another on the west of the Island between it & Conanicut I—called the main channel, in which there are 2 frigates—besides 3 gallies and 2 or 3 frigates at New Port. a third on the west of Conanicut Island—called the west passage in which there are 3 Frigates That the enemys land force amount to 7000 men including three regiments on Conanicut.

He proposes that the Admiral should detach a proper force up the east and west channels to take the frigates & galleys stationed there which force might afterward serve to cover the passage of the American troops—From Bristol and Tiverton—And that the main body of the Squadron sh^d. block up the principal or middle Channel—so as to prevent the escape of the enemys ships—and the arrival of succours—his design is to pass all the enemys works on the North part of the Island—leaving a sufficient detachment to observe the troops stationed in them—and to advance rapidly to the attack of the redouts which immediately environ the Town—at the moment of this attack he wishes the Count to begin his upon the batteries which defend the harbour to cannonade the Town—and land his troops in the most favourable place for seconding the American attack.

He refers the Count to a sketch of the country sent by me—as this did not appear to be sufficiently accurate and detailed to be satisfactory I wrote to the general entreating him if possible to inform the Admiral as nearly as he could—the strength of the profiles in each battery—height of parapet—height of the ground above the surface of the water—distance to which they might be approached—number of guns and their callibers—observing that tho' from the sketch both the entrance and bason of Newport harbour appeared to be subject to a dangerous cross-fire—yet upon a more minute investigation they might be found contemptible compared with the force to be employed against them—I likewise enquired whether the right and left flank of the enemy's chain of redoubts were not so situated—as to admit of vessels anchoring near enough to fire ricochet along the line.

27th. Two deserters crossed from Rhode Island—they say that the scarcity of provision occasions murmuring among The troops.— that the new levies are employed in mowing—that the French fleet is expected—and the troops are busily employed in raising new works—

28—A Ship and sloop appear off block Island—two british Frigates beat out of the harbour at New-port—but returned towards evening—thick hazy weather.—⁵

29—The Fog cleared away and the appearance of the French Squadron was as sudden, as if they had been brought to view by raising a curtain—The gentleman who had the superintendence of the pilots did not choose to venture them till the signal agreed upon should be given—I went on board the admiral with my dispatches—He informed me that his intention was to have gone into New-port harbour and fired the signal there—the receipt of Gen^l Sullivans letter—the expediency of distributing pilots among the ships—and the advanced hour of the day—induced the admiral to anchor his squadron off the main channel and order two frigates with a tender⁶ up the Eastern Channel and the *Sagittaire*⁷ a Ship of the line up the west.

30—The orders relative to the ships and frigates could not be executed till the morning—the Sagittaire was fired upon from a two gun battery of twenty four pounders on the west side of Conannicut—she returned a broad side and passed it—from an explosion which we discovered immediately after we judged that the enemy had blown up their magazine and evacuated the battery—the Sagittaire received two slight scratches in her hull—Upon the approach of the Aimable and Alcmene frigates in the East channel—the enemy set fire to the *King Fisher*⁸ 20 gun sloop—The lamb galley⁹ mounting 2 eighteen—2 nine and 2 six pounders—and sent the *spit-fire*¹⁰ galley mounting 2 eighteens—2 twelves & six six pounders—in form of a fire-ship

The latter blew up, soon after the Count de Grasse¹¹ had cause a grapnel to be fixed in her—and while his crew were in the act of towing her off—but neither they nor their gallant commander received the least injury—M^r Dorset¹² who boarded the King Fisher with a party, with a view of saving her from total destruction—had an escape equally providential—the remains of her powder blew up while they were on board—without doing them any hurt—Previous to making the grant attack on the batteries in the harbour—the Admiral judged it of the greatest importance to make himself master of conannicut Island—The difficulties in the way were these—If he were to attack them only on one side—viz. the western—the enemy would have nothing to hinder them from empowering our attack with reinforcements to station some ships on the E. side of Conannicut would effectually cut off the communication and the Admiral would have ordered the ships to run the gauntlet thro' the entrance of the harbour—if they could afterwards have anchored out of the reach of the batteries within, but this was pronounced impossible. And to expose them both to the fire of the passage, and the more deliberate cannonade from the batteries would be exposing them too much in a preliminary operation—It was determined therefore to call upon General Sullivan for a proper number of militia to oppose such reinforcements as it was judged the enemy could spare—By the admirals desire Col. Fleury¹³ and myself set out to represent the importance of the object and ask his assistance—In our way we met Genl. Sullivan—he informed us that he had several new matters to propose to the admiral and judged a conference with him necessary—he was received on board with proper military honors—and at his departure the admirals ship¹⁴ was manned, and fired fifteen cannon—Gen. Sullivan brought a draught on a larger scale—but a draught which the admiral had was infinitely more correct and minute—The Gen^l informed the Count that the enemy's principal work was on domine hill¹⁵—that this was the highest point in that part of the Island and commanded both the redoubts and the Town—that this carried either by storm—or if that were found impracticable, by heavy artillery and mortars all the rest would follow of course—here consequently he intended to bend his strength, he proposed that the American troops should land on the east side of the Island and the French on the west—each to support the other in case of attack—he still judged it unnecessary for the Count to make his attack on the batteries—till the moment in which the attack on the enemy's works should take place.

This evening some of the outermost ships made signals of the appearance of a fleet the squadron was ordered under sail to be in the greater readiness either for chase or fight—The vessels from the E & W channels ordered out—31st. The Squadron returned to their Station.

The Fleet announced by the signals proved to be eight transports convoyed by a Frigate. Some say they were loaded with wood from Long Island for Newport. It is generally believed they were loaded with Beef and Flour. They put about as soon as they discovered the French Ships and escaped under the Veil of Night.

American privateersmen who had landed upon Conanicut and several of the inhabitants asserted that the Enemy had evacuated that Island. The Count determined to send a party towards Evening to ascertain the facts. Among other plans, it was once proposed that the whole fleet should proceed up the West Channel, turn the North end of Conanicut, and descend the main Channel, till it should arrive at a proper place for operating. This it was urged would avoid the Cross fire at the entrance, and put the Ships in a position from whence they would be less exposed to the fire of the interior Batteries—But upon further examination it was found, that to effect this detour, the ships must either have a Wind which would answer both to go up the West and come down the middle passage—or, that after going up with a fair wind they must wait at the North end of Conanicut for a favorable change to come down or lastly that they must beat down the main Channel. The uncertainty and delay incident to the two first were discouraging—The last was declared by the most experienced pilots to be impracticable for ships of the line—As the narrow limits of the Channel would not allow sufficient scope for working, and missing stays in such circumstances would be fatal—

By the Admirals desire I went on shore to make some arrangement for the reception of the sick and prisoners—and for establishing signals at point Judith, that he might have the earliest intelligence of the approach of any of the enemy's ships.

The Admiral sent a party to Conanicut for the purpose beforementioned, their report confirmed the accounts of the privateersmen &ca.

1st. Aug^t. As soon as the morning Fog which generally prevails at this season, was dissipated—The Count landed with a detachment on Conanicut, in order to reconnoitre the Harbour and Batteries of Newport. In the Battery on the West side of Conanicut which had fired upon the Sagittaire, we found two twenty four pounders spiked up, their carriages intire and their heavy ammunition. From thence we proceeded through the incampment of the three Regiments, which appeared to have been precipitately abandoned, to the Battery on the East side called Dumplings Rocks Battery. The two 24 pounders belonging to this, the Enemy had thrown down the precipice on which the Battery stood. We discovered them with their carriages at the waters edge below. in both Batteries the platforms appeared to have been newly laid.

From the Heights on the East side of Conanicut we had a very distinct View of the Battery on Brentons point—the Cannon appeared to be 24 pounders.—two fire obliquely on the entrance of the harbour—and two directly across—

The Battery on Goat Island is partly of Earth and partly of Masonry—It has a great many embrasures—but we could not discover any Cannon in it—besides it appears to be in ruinous condition and its low situation must make it yield at the first salute from the lower tear & Top, as it may be approached to a very convenient distance.—The Battery on Dyers point appears to be most respectable and has this advantage over us—that the Ships of the line cannot approach any nearer than half a mile—but this circumstance will only retard our success a little—The Work on Domini Hill appears considerable—but the face presented to us is not flanked—we discover Two frigates¹⁶ at the upper end of the main passage—some distance beyond the town, An East Indiamen armed as a Ship of war (which appears the most respectable Ship of War they have)¹⁷ and a Frigate between Goat Island and the Town in front of the Town¹⁸—along the Kuays a number of merchantmen and Transports—within Brenton point One Vessel which is said to be a fire-Ship—We discovered an Encampment just above the Town—Brenton point Battery is guarded by a Detachment of Hessians.

2^d—The Admiral disembarrassed his Squadron of the Sick—Prisoners & prizes. The Two last are ordered to providence. The Sick are in Houses near the North & South ferry, up the West passage. Gen^l Sullivan has appointed a Commissary to supply them with necessaries.—In this neighbourhood is the Watering place for the fleet—the daily consumption is so great, that they supply themselves slowly—what I have gathered concerning the Enemy's force—and our own is as follows.

3^d By the Admirals desire Col Fleury & myself set out for providence to know in what forwardness matters are for the land attack.

4 Early in the morning we arrived at providence.

Strength of the Enemy previous to reinforcements	3000
1 st Reinforcement under Gen ^l Brown } 1 st Batallion of his Brigade ¹⁹ }	344
2 ^d Reinforcement under Gen Prescott ²⁰	1200
Total	4544
Marines and Sailors	1000
	5544

The British Regiments are the 38—43—54—22^d—there are Six foreign Regiments & 2 American Corps.²¹

General Sullivan has in this State

Continentals	2000
Militia	3000
He expects from Massachusetts Militia	3000
Connecticut	1000
New Hampshire	600
	9,600 ²²

Besides this the Division under the Marquiss de la Fayette,²³ part of which arrived yesterday—and part the day before—Several Corps of Volunteers—including of a Regiment of Artillery from Boston.

We shall labour under a great disadvantage in having no brass field pieces of large Calibers—The Iron ordnance that we must from necessity use will be very unweildy—From the tardiness of the Militia and the necessity of constructing transport Boats, I have no hopes of our being ready for action before monday next. General Sullivan exerts himself as much as possible, but he cannot hasten the wished for day.—The Count D’Estaing’s case is cruel when I consider what a noble Squadron he commands—That by a long voyage he missed meeting the British Fleet at Sea—that by a physical impossibility he was obliged to renounce the Splendid enterprize at Sandy Hook—That by new misfortunes he is losing the most precious of moments—at a time when the Eyes of all Europe are upon him—As I think him a great Officer and most respectable man, I cannot but most sincerely feel for him.

In obedience to your Excellency’s command I represented to Count D’Estaing the advantages that would result from stationing a Ship of the line in the sound—and the practicability of his overtaking the British fleet in such a situation as we would wish should the evacuation of New York take place. He was perfectly of your Excellency’s opinion in both points—but he seemed to think that the attack of Rhode Island would require all his force—and besides it seems to be his principle to keep his Squadron together—and not to weaken it by Detachment—. As soon as the present expedition is over he will be ready to bend his course either to Hallifax or Sandy Hook, as the General good may require—If Hallifax should be the next Object, will not a co-operation on our parts by land, be necessary, and in that case, will it not be advisable to make some timely arrangements.

Inclosed I transmit your Excellency a Map,²⁴ which may be useful in illustrating the proposed plan of Operations—. The french Troops are to land on the west side of Rhode Island above Dyers Island.—the Americans on the East side nearly opposite. We have reason to beleive that the Enemy have abandoned their works on the North part of the Island—and have centered themselves within their lines at new port.—I omitted to mention to your Excellency that when the Sagittaire was detached up the west passage—it was represented to the Admiral that she was out of supporting distance and was exposed to an Attack from the Enemy’s whole naval force.—He therefore ordered the *Fantasque*²⁵ another Ship of the line to take the same Station.

I fear I have tired your Excellency with detail—and hope my next will contain more important matter in fewer words. I am [&c.]

LIEUTENANT COLONEL JOHN LAURENS TO HENRY LAURENS, PRESIDENT OF THE CONTINENTAL CONGRESS

Providence [R.I.] 4th August 1778.

I thank you my dearest friend and father for your tender letter of the 26th Ult^{o.1} I was upon the point of writing to you the 22^d when I was ordered to fly with important dispatches to Gov^r. Trumbull,² General Sullivan³ and the Count d'Estaing⁴—I commissioned one of my friends to acquaint you of the circumstance, but perhaps the multiplicity of Affairs in which I left him involved, will have made him lose sight of the matter—in 48 hours over the worst and in some parts the most obscure road that I ever travel'd, I arrived at Providence, had a conference with Gen^l Sullivan, and proceeded immediately with ~~the~~ pilots provided for the french fleet, down to Point Judith—Boats were soon provided and every thing put in readiness for boarding the Admiral as soon as ~~ever~~ he should announce himself by the firing of five Cannon—here I waited in a very disagreeable kind of company 'till the morning of the 29th. for tho' the Squadron anchored off block island the preceding afternoon—the haziness of the weather rendered them invisible to us—in the morning when the fog was dissipated their appearance was as sudden as ~~the~~ a change of decorations in an opera house—Upon my delivering Gen^l Washingtons Dispatches—and Gen^l Sullivans containing a plan of operations—The Admiral informed me his intention had been to proceed immediately into the Main channel of Newport and attack the Enemys Batteries—the day however began to be too far spent— it was expedient to distribute intelligent Pilots ~~among~~ in the Squadron—and in pursuance of Gen^l Sullivans plan the main channel was blocked up with the Squadron—a Ship of the Line was ordered up the West Channel⁵—& Two Frigates and a Tender up the East⁶—By consulting the Map you will find that there are three entrances to Rhode Island—one on the east of Rhode Island between it and the main—called the Seakonnet passage—one on the west, between it and Cononicut Island—which is the principal or main passage— a third between Cononicut and the mainland, commonly called the western passage—in the first Gen^l Sullivan informed the Admiral there were two Galleys and one small Frigate—in the second two Frigates besides two Galleys and two or three frigates at Newport—in the last two small frigates— farther that he estimated the enemys land force including three Regiments posted on Conanicut at 7000 effective—

Gen^l Sullivans plan founded on these data—was that the Admiral should detach a proper force up the eastern and western channels to take the enemys ships stationed in each—to block up the main channel with the remainder of the squadron, so as effectually to cut off the retreat of their Ships, and to prevent the arrival of reinforcements—the French Ships in the eastern and western channels were afterwards to cover the passage of the American Troops from Tiverton and Bristol—The Troops were not to amuse themselves with attacking the works in the northern part of the island—but a sufficient detachment was to be left to be a guard upon the troops posted in those works—while the main body was to advance rapidly to the attack of the Fort & redouts which immediately environ the Town of Newport—at the moment of that attack the Count was to force the passage into Newport harbour—silence the enemys batteries cannonade the Town—and disembark his Marines and Land forces at the most proper place for seconding the American attack—

The Sagittaire a Ship of the Line, went up the western passage on the morning of the 30th. and was fired upon by a two Gun battery of 24 pounders which the enemy had on the west side of Conanicut—the Sagittaire returned a broad side as she passed—and we discovered from the Admirals Ship an explosion at the battery, which induced us to believe that the enemy had abandoned it—The Ship received two scratches in her hull—and proceeded to her station—

The Aimable and Alcmene Frigates accompanied by the Stanley (Prize) Tender— went up the eastern passage— upon their approach— the enemy set fire to the *Kingfisher*⁷ 20 Gun Sloop—and to the Lamb Galley⁸ mounting [blank] and sent the spit fire Galley mounting [blank] in form of a fire-ship—The Count de Grace⁹ commanded the boat which was ordered to tow the latter off—She blew up soon after the Grapnel was fixed—and the Gallant officer with his crew escaped unhurt—an officer¹⁰ who went on board with a party to extinguish the flames of the Kingfisher had an escape equally providential—her powder room blew up while they were on board—and they received no injury—the hulk drifted over to the main— and her Guns will be saved—

From the enemys keeping possession of the island of Conanicut the Admiral concluded that it was an important post to them—the battery which they had on the east side of it afforded a cross fire upon the entrance of the harbour—and the three Regiments there made it an object—The Count therefore thought it essential that we should make ourselves masters of it—The most effectual way of attacking it would have been by disembarking Troops on the West Side of it—and sending a proper force of Ships up the main channel to run through the fire of the batteries at the entrance and take a proper position for cutting off the communication between Rhode Island and Conanicut—so as to prevent the enemys throwing across reinforcements—but upon inquiry, it was found impracticable to anchor the Ships any where out of reach of the enemys batteries—so that after running the Gantlet at the entrance the Ships w^d. have been exposed to a constant deliberate fire in the harbour—these difficulties obliged the Count to renounce this plan of sending Ships up the main channel—for this duty—It was then inquired whether the Ships might not effect the business by going up the western channel, turning the north point of Conanicut and coming down the main channel—by this means they would in the first instance avoid the cross fire at the entrance—and might take such a position relatively to the harbour as w^d. discourage the enemy from throwing across succours—but the most experienced pilots informed us that to effect this detour the Ships must either have a wind which w^d. answer equally for going up the western and coming down the main channel—or that after going up with a fair wind they would be obliged to beat down the main channel—or lastly that they would be obliged to wait for a fair wind to bring them down from the North end of Conanicut—The delay and uncertainty incident to the first and last put them out of the question—the second was pronounced impracticable on account of the narrowness of the M. Channel above Newport—which w^d. not allow scope enough for the Ships work^s. and missing stays w^d. be fatal in such circumstances—

It was determined therefore that in order to gain Conanicut a body of Militia sh^d. be applied for, to make us equal to such a reinforcem^t. as we thought the enemy could spare—Col Fleury¹¹ and myself went by the Admirals desire to make application for this purpose—in our way we learnt that some American Privateers had been on the island— and that the enemy had evacuated the battery which fired on the Sagittaire—We met Gen^l. Sullivan on his way to the Fleet—where he was going to have a conference with the Admiral and propose some changes in his plan—he was received on board with the Guard of Marines, and the drums beating to arms— and at his departure the Ship was manned—and fifteen Cannon fired—the evening of the 30th the outermost Ships made signals of the appearance of a Fleet—the Admiral got his Squadron in readiness for fight & chace—but the fleet put about & escaped under the veil of night—it proved to be 8 transports with wood from Long Island bound to Newport and convoyed by a Frigate—

On the evening of the 31st. The Admiral sent a party to reconnoitre Conanicut and discover whether the enemy had really abandoned all their batteries as was reported—it was found that they had—

pounders spiked— and all their heavy Amunition—

From the battery on the E. end—we had a distinct view of the Town Shipping—and batteries the latter lost that respectability which they had on paper—the fire from the Ships of the Line must annihilate them in an hour—The fort on an eminence called Domine Hill—back of the Town, may require our heavy artillery and some Shells—We have every reason to believe that we shall effect our landing on the island without opposition—as the enemy seemed to have concentered their force in New port—

The Admiral has disembarassed himself of his prisoners, sick and prizes¹²—he is in perfect readiness for acting his part and as anxious as a man can be—General Sullivan has exerted himself to the utmost—but the backwardness of the Militia called for from the Neighboring States—the necessity of constructing Transport Boats, to supply the place of those destroyed by the enemy in their last descent¹³—and many other necessary preparations which require time—have delayed us till now—and I find it impossible to tell you with precision on what day we shall be ready—

I fear my dearest father that I have tired you with detail—and that from a habit of speaking of our operations with my finger on the map—I may in some places not have expressed my meaning fully enough—but my time unluckily will not permit to remedy these inconveniences by writing a new Letter—I am just come from the Admiral to see if it will be possible by any means to hasten our land operations—The French Squadron will want a great quantity of provisions whether they winter here or return to France—no biscuit is to be had here—I am ever your most affectionate

John Laurens.

Pennsilvania must furnish flower—and bakers sh^d. be employed there immediately.

It is reported that 20 Sail of Spanish Ships are on the coast pray who is Don Juan de Miralles—¹⁴

In the letter which I wrote you from black point I mentioned—the Admirals intention to send his prisoners to Philadelphia—some difficulties induced him to change his plan—they are all landed here—

Deserters from Rhode Island—say the Troops are in want of provision and look upon themselves as prisoners.

The Mquis de la Fayette with a division from the Grand Army is arrived—and his men have had time to refresh themselves—¹⁵

Gen^l Greene is likewise arrived—¹⁶

Gen^l Sullivan 1st. estimate of the Enemys land Force is too high— they cannot have much above 5000 men— and the Gen^l begins to think so himself—¹⁷

6. The French frigates Aimable, Lieutenant de vaisseau Antoine-Stanislas-Xavier de Curières de Castelnaud de Saint-Cosme-Sainte-Eulalie, and Alcmène, Lieutenant de vaisseau Pierre-René-Bénigne-Mériadec, comte de Bonneval Ruffo, accompanied by the captured H.M. armed brigantine Stanley, commanded by officier auxiliaire Boulouvard de Barentin, went into the Sakonnet (East) Channel.

7. H.M. ship-rigged sloop-of-war Kingsfisher, Comdr. Hugh Cloberry Christian

8. That is, H.M. galley Alarm, commanded by Lt. Philip d'Auvergne.

9. Ensign Etienne March Joseph, comte de Grasse-Limermont, served with the French frigate Aimable.

10. Paul Gilbert d'Aragones, Chevalier d'Orcet, served with Alcmène.

11. Lt. Col. François-Louis Teissèdre de Fleury, Continental Army.

12. At the beginning of Aug., the French had conveyed their English prisoners and sick to Providence under the care of Georges-René Chevalier Pleville le Pelley, Lieutenant de vaisseau in Lanquedoc. See Journal of Lieutenant de vaisseau Jean-Julien Chevalier Le Mauff, French Navy, and Journal of French Frigate Engageante, 1 Aug., both above.

14. The report concerning the Spanish fleet was false. Don Juan de Miralles had been sent to visit Congress by the Spanish Governor of Cuba in the guise of a merchant to gather information about the war and about “any design prejudicial to Spain and her American possessions.” Letters of Delegates 10: 82–84. He remained in the United States as agent of the Spanish government until his death in April 1780.

15. The detachment of 2,500 men from Washington’s army under the command of the Marquis de Lafayette had divided into two parts in Connecticut. The first part, commanded by Brig. Gen. James Varnum arrived in Scituate, on the outskirts of Providence, on 31 July; the second part, commanded by Lafayette himself arrived at Scituate on 2 Aug. McBurney, R.I. Campaign, p. 102.

16. In a letter to the President of Congress of 3 Aug., Washington explained that he had sent Maj. Gen. Nathanael Greene, the army’s quartermaster general and a native Rhode Islander, to assist in the attack on Newport because Greene was “intimately acquainted with the whole of that Country—and besides he has an extensive interest and influence in it.” He added that Greene’s “services, as well in the Quartermaster line as in the field, would be of material importance.” GW Papers, Rev. War Series 16: 238.

17. In his letter to George Washington, Laurens estimated the total number of British soldiers, sailors, and marines at 5,544. Maj. Gen. John Sullivan apparently believed that this estimate was too low, giving several days later a British strength of 5,500 soldiers plus an additional 1,000 marines and sailors. A reasoned, recent, estimate by historian Christian McBurney puts the total at 5,750 able-bodied soldiers. See: Laurens to Washington, this date, above; and, McBurney, R.I. Campaign, pp. 77 and 281n48. For further discussion, see Sullivan to Washington, 1 Aug., above, note 6.

4 August 1778, 2 hours after noon, Providence, R.I.

My general

I have the honor of reporting to you:

That—The Continental troops of Mr. the General Sullivan,¹ included among them those under the immediate orders of Mr. De la Fayette in to the number of 3,500, are ready to march for yverton,² the place designated for the embarking.—

That the Militias from N. England 1,000 from New Hampshire, 1,000 from Connecticut, 3,000 from Rhode Island, 2,000 from Massachusetts, in all 7,000, will have arrived at the rendezvous Friday at the soonest or even Saturday.—

That one hundred boats carrying 50 men are ready either here or at yverton—

That there are more than 12 ferry-boats to carry the cannon & the horses necessary for their carriage—that the field artillery are numerous & that there are more than 12 iron pieces of 18 & 9 mortars of 10 inches and that, however, despite the activity of the general and of those whom he employs, they will not be ready to pass onto the island before Saturday at the earliest, or even Sunday.—I fear with great reason that this will not occur until Monday.

“ That there are sent today into the Western Channel 40 boats destined for the troops to be landed from your squadron and that the captain who commands it will receive your orders for the place where you want them placed up to there.

“ that if one knew the number of saddle horses, or of carriage horses, that Mr. the Count d’Estaing has need of, let it be for himself, his aides de Camp, to make the descent at popasquash³ Point at the height of the Middle Channel, or at such other place that you will designate——they will send 10 saddle horses.

“ That there are some difficulties regarding the biscuit necessary for your squadron, that can be sent only in a small quantity, owing to the paucity of our warehouses of wheat—but that the boats will be assembled, with promptness and abundance to furnish the needs of the squadron.—there are only 3 bakers to bake the biscuit, and little wheat.—

The enemy forces at Rhode Island are

3000 men	former garrison.	{ The 28. Reg ^{t4} 2. Anspach. ⁵ 1. R raised by fenning ⁷ 1 detachment of artillery ⁹

400 –	English arrived the 26 with Gen. Brown. ⁸
1200 –	Sailors marines Tories, etc.
5800.	Total.—¹⁰

They have abandoned the works on the north side and probably the battery on the east side, which had been able to stop or retard the progress of the frigates that should protect the descent of General Sullivan, in the way that the ship 50 guns that M. the Count destaing proposed to send there could, if he judges it appropriate to re-enter the Western Channel, turn Cononicut, & protect the French descent on d’yers point.¹¹ The enemy works that line the city on the east can be beaten from the reverse and raked by the fire of the squadron, except the fort on Dominy Hill.¹²

“ that the fleet of Lord Howe is still at New York, starving along with the army, but a rumor without known foundation runs that part of the fleet from Cork has arrived there.

It is said Gen. Prescott has an evil design at Rhode Island.

As soon as I have any news either positive or interesting, I shall have the honor of sending you an express.—

I await your orders, my general, and if zeal and good will can make up for inadequacy, I hope to find some occasion to merit and justify your kindnesses—the fond hope of your good will is a very pleasing motive for me to push myself to merit it. I have the honor to be [&c.]

[Newport, Rhode Island]

4th August [1778].

Thick fog all last night. Wind S. S.E. wind from 10 this morning, with thick weather. About 11 it came round to the S.W. and blew fresh. We just then got a sight of the French fleet, in the same position as before.

Everything quiet during the night. . . .

At 3 this afternoon Six small Schooners & Sloops came out from behind Connonicut & Prudence, and Stood down as far as Halfway rock.¹ The *Cerberus*² fired two shot at the headmost, which fell short. She, in return fired a Swivel at the Cerberus and then stood up towards Gold-Island,³ followed by the others.

A two Decker came about half way up the Narraganset passage this afternoon, and anchored there.

Monsieur

Le 4 aout 1778. [au large de Rhode Island]

Je Reçois par Monsieur le marquis de la Fayette, les deux lettres que Votre Excellence m'a fait L'honneur de m'écrire; Votre Confiance dans Monsieur John Brown¹ et L'utilité dont nous sera ses soies, lui assuraient le plaisir avec lequel J'ai fait connoissance avec lui. il ne peut me Rendre un service plus agreable que celui de me mettre dans le cas heureux de recevoir souvent de vos nouvelles et de Vos secours sur les Choses a faire, et sur Les lieux. Monsieur Le marquis de la Fayette a Bien Voulu me dire que Monsieur Brown seroit assés Bon pour donner des avis à M^r. de Pleville deja chargé de La Vent des prises faites par L'escadre du Roy.²

nous n'avons que quatre pieces de campayne de fonte du Calibre de six: elles ont des affuts: leur pesenteur exigers, Je Crois, huit chevaux chacune; Si votre excellence pouvait y joindre quatre pieces du Calibre de quatre, et les chevaux nécessaires, cette artillerie serait proportionnée au nombre de nos troupes; Deux, quatre ou six chevaux de monture Est Entout, pour les officiers majores ou pour moy nous seraient Infinimens agreables: ils seraient payés d'après l'estimation que Vous auriés la Bonté dordonner.

Nous n'avons point de tentes, J'espere Cependant profiter de la permission que Vous m'aves d'onnée de débarquer des troupes a tower hill; s'il etoit possible de my envoyer les quarante Batteaux plates que Vous nous destinés, le simulacre de notre descente en Rendroit La Realité mieux ordonnée. Ce mouvement De Batteaux, Comme vous l'observées très Bien, pourrait partager l'attention de L'ennemi. Monsieur Le marquis de la Fayette vous fera le detail de la nécessité dans laquelle nous nous trouverions, si j'étais obligé de me Rembarquer, pour resister a un ennemi Maritime. ce motif, et Celui de diviser les forces des anglais En leur montrant un front un peu plus important que ne Seroit le nôtre, me ferait desirer que Vous trouvariés convenable, qu'une aïse, ou au moins qu'un Corps de Vôtre armée descendit En même tems, et dans le même lieu que nous, vous en seriés Encore plus Certain que tout agirait au même instant, si Votre choix tombait alors sur Monsieur de La Fayette, l'ensemble des mouvemens en serait plus sur, il Commanderait toujours Vos troupes, et il se trouverait dans mon absence naturellement a la tête des Français. attirer L'attention par deux Fausses attaques serait selon mon opinion, un employ fort utile de quelques hommes, Car partager, C'est affaiblir; on n'employe que ce que'on Veut dans une fausse attaque, a Les Anglais pour peu qu'ils soient abusés en opposent ordinairement Beaucoup dans tout Endroit ou il est probable qu'on peut se porter.

Je me proposait hier de soumettre a Vos lumieres un plan qui aurait été de forcer avec L'Escadre le chenal du milieu dans le même instant ou vous auriées débarqué: Leffet et le bruit de notre artillerie sont infiniment plus imposant que nos soldats: Je n'étais Retenu que par L'inquietude que ce Changement n'est Causat un trop grand dans Votre projet. quatre Batimens qu'on a Vu Couler hier au soir par les Anglais devant Dyers Batterie,³ en allant de Rhod-Island, a Goat Island me font Craindre qu'ils n'ayent fermé la Routte a tenir en dedans de la passe de pareils obstacles; ils sont d'autant plus dangereux qu'ils sont ignorés, et ne peuvent être vûs. les feux, le mouvement, et par Consequent les travaux ont été forts grands dans le port, pendant La nuit.

Je ne suis pas encore tranquille sur le fond que nous trouverons en sortant du Canal de L'ouest pour passer par le Nord de Cononikut dans le chenal du milieu. le peu de Vent de Nord qui souffle dans cette saison me fait Redouter de grandes Lenteurs pour me Raprocher de La ville, et pour etendre l'escadre sur La Coste de Rhod Island, affin dy menacer et dy battre avec nos Vaisseaux plusieurs points En mêmes temps, J'aurai L'honneur de Vous instruire successivement de mes Reflexions sur ces difficultés. on ne peut trôp s'en occuper avant que d'agir, pour tacher de les faire disparaitre dans L'action.

Nous ne ferons que peu d'eau, les sources se'puisent, Les voyeges sont Lents, et penibles, notre biscuit est pret à finir. Je vous supplie De daignes ne pas oublier les ordres au sujet de Six milles Briques necessaires pour la Construction des fours à Batir a bord et avec lesquels chaque vaisseau avec de la farine pourrait suffire a sa Consommation; nôtre Existance En depend absolument, s'il est impossible de trouver ou de faire Du Biscuit a terre; excuses mon importunité, les Besoins de premiere nécessité sont pressans, le desir d'être utiles a L'Amerique nous fait solliciter la possibilité dy subsister. J'ay L'honneur d'être [&c.]

Sir

4 August 1778 [off Rhode Island]

I receive by Monsieur the Marquis de la Fayette the two letters that your Excellency did me the honor of writing me. Your confidence in Mr. John Brown¹ and the usefulness of which his cares will be to us assure to him the pleasure with which I have made his acquaintance. He can render me no more agreeable service than that of putting me in the happy situation of often receiving your news and your help of the things to do and on the places. M. the Marquis de la Fayette has been pleased to tell me that Mr. Brown would be so good as to give some advice to M. de Pleville, who is charged with the conduct of prizes made by the king's squadron.²

We have only four iron field pieces, six pounders; They have carriages, Their weight will require, I believe, eight horses each. If your Excellency can join to them four pieces of four-pounders and the necessary horses, this artillery would be proportionate to the number of our troops. Two, four or six riding horses is all for the major officers or for me, they would be infinitely agreeable to us; they would be paid for according to the estimation that you would have the goodness to order.

We have no tents whatsoever; I hope, however, to profit from the permission that you give me of disembarking some troops at Tower Hill. If it would be possible to send to me there the 40 flatboats that you intend for us, the simultaneity of our landing would take place in reality in better order. This movement of boats, as you observe very [well?] could divide the enemy's attention. M. the marquis de la Fayette will tell you in detail of the necessity in which we find ourselves, if I am obliged to re-embark in order to resist a maritime enemy; this objective, that of dividing the English forces in showing them a force a little more imposing than ours would be, makes me desire that you would find it convenient that a wing, or at least that a corps of your army would land at the same time and in the same place as we, you would be thereby even more certain that all will act in the same instant. If your choice falls on M. de La Fayette, the unity of the movements would be more certain; He would still command your troops and in my absence would find himself naturally at the head of the French. To draw the attention of the English by two sham attacks would be, in my opinion, a powerful employment, useful for a few men; for to divide is to weaken. We would employ only what we want in a sham attack; to the English, so that they little may be abused, while ordinarily opposing much in every place in which one can take oneself.

I proposed to myself yesterday to submit to your judgment a plan that would have been of forcing with the squadron the middle channel at the same instant that you would land. The effect and the noise of our artillery are infinitely more respectable than our soldiers. I have not retained that [proposal] because of my concern not to cause too great a change in your project. Four ships that were seen sunk yesterday evening by the English in front of Dyers battery,³ while going from Rhode Island to Goat Island, make me fear that they have closed the route we would take through the passage with similar obstacles; They are much more dangerous if unknown and unable to be seen. The fires, the movement, and in consequence, the works, have been very great in the port during the night.

I am no longer unconcerned about the bottom that we will find in leaving the western channel in order to pass by the north of Conanicut into the middle channel. The little wind from the north that blows in this season causes me to doubt grand attempts to approach the city and to extend the squadron on the coast of Rhode Island in order to menace it there and to fire with our ships of the line on several points simultaneously. I would have the honor of your thoughts successively on my reflections on these difficulties. One cannot think too much about them before acting, in order to try to make them disappear in the action.

We have brought on board only a little water. The springs are drawn upon. The trips to them are slow and arduous. Our biscuit is nearly exhausted and I ask you not to forget the orders on the subject of six thousand bricks necessary to construct ovens aboard and with which each ship of the line with the wheat, would suffice for its consumption: our existence absolutely depends on it, if it is impossible to find or to make biscuit on shore. Excuse my importunity; the needs of first necessity are pressing, and the desire of being useful to America makes us solicit the possibility of subsisting here. I have the honor to be [&c.]

JOURNAL OF LE COMTE DE CAMBIS ON BOARD THE LANGUEDOC

Aout 1778. Mardi 4. Au jour la brume s'est un peu dissipée, et dans un éclairci nous avons apperçu la *Provence*¹ sous voile qui n'avait pas pu se tirer au large et peu après elle a mouillé le vent étant au SSO très foible. L'on a distribué et réparti sur tous les bâtimens de l'escadre les fruits et rafraichissemens formant la cargaison du bateau venant de New-Providence. á 9 heures M^r le M^{qis} de la Fayette est venu à bord avec plusieurs officiers françois servant sous ses ordres, voir notre Général qui lui a communiqué ses dispositions et mesures pour forcer l'entrée de Newport.² Cette opération que nous sommes impatient d'entreprendre n'a été retardée qu'à la demande du Général Sullivan qui rassemble son armée afin d'opérer une diversion en attaquant les Anglois à revers au meme instant où notre escadre se présente devant le port. L'armée de M^r Sullivan sera composée au rapport des américains, de 15 à 18 mille hommes et la petite armée de M^r de la Fayette qui est déjà prete au nombre de deux mille est destinée à s'y joindre, et la descente des Américains sur Rhode island doit se faire par le chenal de L'Est où nos frégates sont mouillées, y avant été envoyées exprès pour protéger et favoriser le passage de cette Armée qui doit se faire avec des bateaux plats que l'on prepare.³ A une heure après-midi la brise du SO a un peu fraichi, ce qui a fait dissiper la brume; et tout de suite le *Protecteur*⁴ qui avoit ordre d'appareiller a travaillé à mettre sous voile. á 2 heures ce vaisseau est entré par le chenal de l'Ouest. á 4 heures le *vaillant*⁵ a aussi appareillé pour bloquer le chenal du milieu, et notre pilote américain accompagné d'un officier major ont été mouiller ce vaisseau à la même place qu'avoit occupé l'Engageante.⁶ á 5 heures M^r de la Fayette a quitté le Languedoc où il a été salué de 3 cris de vive le roi et il s'est rendu sur la Provence qui l'attendoit pour mettre sous voile et le conduire en dedans par le chenal de l'Ouest pour se rendre à la Providence où il a laissé son armée; mais la brume épaisse qui est survenue à 5 heures ½ a obligé la Provence de mouiller presqu'aussitôt. Pendant la nuit le tems s'est éclairci et le vent a été au Sud et SSO frais.

August 1778. Tuesday 4. At daylight the fog dissipated a bit, and in a break in the fog we glimpsed the *Provence*¹ under sail, which had not been able to tack at sea and a little after it anchored again, the wind being at SSW, very weak. They distributed and divided among all the ships of the squadron the fruits and refreshments making up the cargo of the boat coming from New Providence. At 9 o'clock M. the Marquis de Lafayette came on board with several French officers serving under his orders to see our general, who communicated to him his dispositions and measures to force the entrance of Newport.² This operation, which we are impatient to undertake, was delayed only at the request of General Sullivan, who assembles his army in order to work a diversion in attacking the English from behind at the very instant in which our squadron presents itself before the port. The army of M. Sullivan will be composed, according to the Americans, of 15 to 18 thousand men and the small army of M. de Lafayette, which, already ready at the number of two thousand, is intended to join it there, and the landing of the Americans on Rhode-Island should be made by the East Passage where our frigates are anchored, having been sent there expressly to protect and favor the passage of that army which is to be made with flat boats that have been prepared.³ At one o'clock in the afternoon, the breeze from the SW somewhat brisk, which caused the fog to dissipate; and immediately the Protecteur,⁴ which had orders to weigh, worked to get under sail. At 2 o'clock this ship entered by the West Passage. At 4 o'clock the *Vaillant*⁵ also weighed in order to block the Middle Passage, and our American pilot accompanied by a major officer anchored that ship at the same place that the Engageante occupied.⁶ A 5 o'clock M. de Lafayette left the Languedoc in which he was saluted with 3 shouts of long live the king and he was transferred to the Provence, which waited for him to get under sail and take him by the West Passage to Providence, where he had left his army; but the thick fog that returned at 5:30 o'clock obliged the Provence to anchor again almost immediately. During the night the weather cleared up and the wind was at the South and SSW, brisk.

3. The source of these numbers is not known. Continental officers pegged their troop strength at around 11,000 and communicated this number to d'Estaing. Estimates of the American troop strength varied at the time. Lt. Col. François-Louis Teissèdre de Fleury, Continental Army, reported to d'Estaing that Sullivan's forces numbered 3,500 Continental troops, along with 7,000 militia. Lt. Col. John Laurens, however, placed the number of Continentals at 2,000 on hand, with Lafayette's division still arriving, and 7,600 militia. See Fleury to d'Estaing, 4 Aug., above. See also Laurens to George Washington, 4 Aug., above, esp. notes 22 and 23. A reasoned modern estimate of Continental strength finds that Sullivan's men numbered a little fewer than 12,000 in total. MAJOR GENERAL JOHN SULLIVAN TO VICE-AMIRAL COMTE D'ESTAING

[headquarters/Providence Aug^t. 5th. 1778.]

My dear Count

The Letter¹ which you did me the honor to send me by the Marquis de la Fayette came to hand last night 12.^oC. Previous to his return, I had Sent your Excellency four field carriages for Six pounder & afterward in a boat two brass four pounder, had your Excellency's Letter arrived before, I Should have sent four brass pieces but I hope what I have Sent will be Sufficient [for] what cannon you can mount upon the carriages [&] if they Should not be sufficient, you will please to let me Know & I will Send two more: Major Sylvester Gardner will Supply your Excellency with the necessary horses For them & For your family: The boats are already sent foreward. I have consulted the general officers about me, respecting one wing of the army disembarking with your troops: they are of opinion that it will be but to send Your Excellency a detachment of the army as Soon as Enough troops are in, to warrant the measure, I will Endeavor to put them under good officers, The General command of them your Excellency will please to accept. I Should be very happy to have Sent the marquis, with a wing of the army to have Joined your Excellency, but that would weaken the other wing & render it unable to make a Landing, besides it it would Leave me but one major general, and I am certain the presence of the marquis cannot be so much Wanted where So Experienced & brave officer as the Count d'Estaing Commands. My plan of Landing with the main body from Sepowet as a place near Bordenpoint arises from the convenience of Keeping up an easy communication in our rear from Tivertown Shore where all our magazins & stores are deposited; your Excellency making a Show of landing your troops at the time we begin to Land, will divide the attention of the Enemy, if they Should throw their whole forces against us you will please to Land your troops & by a Quick march fall upon their rear. the Flanking division & light corps will move forward & gain their flank & when your Excellency comes up with your troops, the Enemy will find himself surrounded on all Sides, Should they turn their whole forces to prevent your Landing, we Shall move across the Island to attack them in rear, facilitate your landing & by pushing on the Light corps & flanking divisions Surround them on all Sides[.] The more Effectually to distract them, I shall adopt the method your Excellency did me the honour to propose by making Feints in Several other places at the Same Time. I would not wish your Excellency to make your Landing till you find the Enemy are about to attack us, for should the forces be Equally devided & both Land at the same time, the Enemy might by a Sudden & desperate attack upon one party, put it to rout & then by turning upon the other get a compleat victory, to prevent which I wish to have one party Strong Enough to make good the Landing under the fire of your frigates at all Events & that as Soon as they are attacked your Excellency should push your troops on the Enemy's rear & if possible cut off their retreat to their Lines near the Town. I have in the map Inclosed² your Excellency by the marquis, marked the places where I shall Embark with the Letter A the place of disembarkation with the Letter B, & the place where I wish your Excellency to Land with the Letter C. Your Excellency will Judge of the best spot to answer the purpose & act accordingly—I think we Shall be able to Land you a considerable reinforcement but I cannot determine the number at present as many of the Troops have not yet arrived. I admire your Excellency's plan of bringing your Ships to attack the Town on many points at the Same Time. This event throw the Enemy into the greatest confusion & insure us Success, I think Sunday morning at day break will be the time for the descent, Should any obstacles appear, I will give your Excellency—immediate notice. Should your Excellency be unfortunately called to oppose a maritime Ennemy, I will immediately detach the marquis de La Fayette to take command of the French troops & those who are detached from us. I cannot Suppose that it was in the power of the Enemy to Sink So many vessels as to prevent your Excellency From forcing your passage in the Middle chanel & Even if that was the case, your fleet may be coming around Connonicut, come down upon the Town without difficulty in the Course of twenty four hours.³ we will wait a day or two rather than Loose the great advantage arising from the fire of the fleet. I Thank your Excellency for the useful hints & instructions in your letter of yesterday & wish your Excellency to make those observations respecting an operation which may occur to you, it will, as you justly observe, lessen the real danger; I Shall do my Self the honor to communicate every thing to your Excellency which may occur to me. I am in hope the Bricks & massons as they were Sent from here Sunday night last with twenty Thousand bricks. I wish your people to Try for water at Bessets mill, where they will find it in plenty. I have ordered three or four vessels to be Loaded here with fresh water & Sent down to you I hope the water will be to you by fryday morning I have the honor to be [&c.] Signé Jn^o. Sullivan.

P.S. if I find my-Self able to make a larger detachment to you perhaps I may find it in my power to Send the marquis with them Signé JS.

MAJOR GENERAL THE MARQUIS DE LAFAYETTE, CONTINENTAL ARMY, TO VICE-AMIRAL COMTE D'ESTAING

A la providence le 5 aoust 1778

je suis arrivé ici la nuit dernière, monsieur le comte, et j'ai parlé vivement le matin des différents points dont vous m'avez fait l'honneur de me charger et sur lesquels je seroit plus positif si je n'avois trouvé ici un officier de plus ancienne date dans la personne du g^{al} sullivan;¹ il a envoyé partout pour rassembler des provisions, quelques unes même ont marché pour la flotte;² il y a des ordres donnés pour cuire du biscuit, en différents endroits;³ vous allés recevoir un homme qui vous indiquera une place plus commode pour faire de l'eau que les puits desséchés dont on est obligé de se servir, il vous arrivera aussi quelques batiments chargés de barriques d'eau, lesquels ramèreront les prisonniers dont vous voulés vous débarrasser; on va faire une recherche ainsi qu'un exemple à ce que j'espère des miliciens qui ont dépouillé ceux que vous leur avés confié et on tâchera de les dégouter de cette manière angloise; vous allés recevoir les pièces de campagne, et les batteaux seront aussi envoyés ainsi que les chevaux;⁴ enfin, monsieur le comte, au lieu de six mille briques on m'a assuré que vous en aurés sous peu vingt mille.⁵ plût au ciel que nos troupes augmentassent dans la même proportion que ces briques, mais il me paroît qu'en lieu de quatorze mille hommes nous ne comptons gueres que sur dix mille à présent, et ils ne sont pas tous arrivés; les troupes continentales vont cependant joindre demain celles des milices qui sont au rendés-vous Commun

Quant à la grande affaire, monsieur le comte, à celle où le succès de l'expédition, l'agrément de la flotte, celui des troupes de terre, enfin tous les avantages que nous devons souhaiter, vous paroissent intéressés, je ne puis pas me vanter d'avoir beaucoup réussi dans ma négociation. l'attaque sur un seul point, l'union des troupes américaines et surtout des troupes Continentales, le rectangle englobant que peut enfermer les anglois, tels sont les articles qui tiennent le plus à Caus[er.] j'ai représenté que l'ennemi divisé dans une opération pareille en étoit bien moins à craindre, que plusieurs fausses, et deux vrais attaques nous repondront de cet avantage, que les anglois perdront à reconnoître le tems qu'ils devroient employer à marcher et à combattre, toutes les fois qu'on les mettoit à même de faire cet sottise, et qu'enfin toutes les fois qu'on faisoit une descente on n'attendoit pas d'être presque tous à terre pour débarquer ce qu'on avoit de mieux comme on le propose à nos troupes.

J'ai dit aussi que si de donner une aîle de l'armée étoit trop, vous vous contenteriés d'un détachement ; que vous laisseriés au g^{al} Sullivan la plus grande partie de ses troupes Continentales; qu'on en joindroit un petit nombre à des miliciens, le tout faisant deux ou trois mille hommes, dont la jonction avec les troupes française leur assureroient une protection et un exemple toujours certains, que ce débarquement se seroit sous le feu des vaisseaux et nous mettroit à portée d'arriver à eux, par la même raison qu'il éra lui même à portée d'arriver à nous suivant le tableau que je vous ai remis. vous remarquerez d'ailleurs que s'il n'accepte pas le projet de faire l'attaque des redoutes sur deux points, il ne perd pas l'avantage du rectangle en question, et lui donne même une forme plus régulière en allongeant votre côté.

J'ai enfin ajouté que non seulement c'étoit à la flotte que nous devons l'expédition puisque sans elle il n'y en auroit point eu, mais que c'étoit le secours de la flotte qui en decidoit le succès dans l'instant de l'attaque. Le bruit et l'effet de vos tonnerres, la division des points où ils se sont craindre, un corps de troupes dont le nombre reconnu Considerable mais cependant incertain descend sous leur protection et dont les premiers pas apprendront aux ennemi qu'il y a des françois parmi eux, Cet est le spectacle inquietant qu'on peut offrir aux anglois, et dont ils seront privés si l'on s'en tient servilement au plan enluminé que j'ai eu l'honneur de vous remettre.

Mes ideés, monsieur le comte, n'ont frappé ni le g^{al} sullivan ni le g^{al} greene⁶ comme je l'aurois désiré. vous voirés par la reponse du premier que sil vous envoye un renfort c'en sera un si peu considerable qu'il ne veut pas se mettre dans la tête que je le prefere au commandement de son aile de six mille hommes parcequ'il me procure le bonheur de me trouver sous vos ordres et compaignon de gloire des françois mes chers compatriotes. daillieurs il imagine que vous garderés le commandement de tout ce detachement, et croit alors que je lui suis dune utilité que je n'appercois pas moi même avec cette fameuse aile gauche.

je n'ai pas cependant oublié de dire que la flotte françoise etoit fuite pour jouer un grand rôle dans cette affaire, que nos troupes de débarquement doivent etre comptér pour beaucoup ; que si l'on arrivoit à terre en toute sureté il n'y avoit pas dinconvenient à alterer la disposition, mais que s'il y avoit du danger les francois avoient le droit d'en jouir, et que c'etoit la seule marque de reconnoissance à laquelle ils pretendoient. de façon que dans les deux cas la descente devoit se faire en même tems, et se faire de façon que les deux partis eussent les occasions de se distinguer que le bonheur leur presenteroit.

je sens bien qu'il est facheux pour certaines gens de voir jouir les belles tirades de la piece par des acteurs étrangers, je sens que les françois eclipseront un peu leurs voisins, et que les beaux coups de theatre leur seroient peut-etre reservé l'attaque de g^{al} sullivan quoique sort importante seroit ce qu'on appelle à la comédie un peu en robbe de chambre en comparaison du spectacle que votre flotte et vos troupes pourroient donner, mais sans exiger que des cœurs qui ne sont pas françois batterent avec cette emotion que j'eprouverois moi même en voyant la gloire de mes compatriotes je devois fache qu'on hesitât à faire un arrangement qui me paroît devoir leur convenir davantage en les rapprochant de la place qu'ils doivent occuper dans cette expedition.

Le g^{al} Sullivan ne trouve pas de difficulté après que les troupes de débarquement ne seront plus sous vos ordres immediats, à ce qu'elles viennent du coté que j'aurai l'honneur de commander. mais tout cela ne ressemble point au projet que vous avés bien voulu me communiquer. L'idée que vos troupes viendroient à terre apres que la descent seroit assurée ne me paroît en aucune maniere acceptable. quant au nombre du detachement qu'il vous offre, je lui ai dit que considerable ou non j'en aimerois le commandement, et que le plaisir de combattre sous les yeux de mes compatriotes ne seroit pas compensé par toutes les ailes possibles, que daillieurs je reprendrois le nombre de troupes qui m'est dû quand je serois joint avec lui. je vous avoüe que je n'aimerois pas à voir les troupes françoises avec des gens dont les cœurs étrangers n'en sentiroient pas le prix.

Cet article de ma lettre est immense, monsieur le comte, mais j'ai voulu vous rendre compte de ce que j'ai dit, vous repeter ce qu'on m'a repondu, et faire scu ce que j'ai cru appercevoir. à present je vous demande la permission d'ajouter ce que le peu de connoissance que j'ai de ce paye-ci me fait espoir. votre projet me paroît tres loin d'etre manqué. Si dans votre reponse au g^{al} sullivan vous en reparlés comme vous paroissant necessaire au succès de l'expedition, conformé à vos desirs et aux vœux de ceux qui sont sous vos ordres, si en y joignant vos reflexions militaires vous voulés bien les appuyer avec fermité, ces messieurs dont trouveront plus aisé de s'y rendre que d'y repondre, et alors ils aggrandiront le Detachement qu'on veut vous donner. le nombre d'en est pas fixé dans la lettre du g^{al} sullivan ; paroissés certain d'au moins deux mille hommes dont la moitié ou un tiers de troupes Continentales. si à cela vous joignés la bonté de me demander pour les commander ou du moins de demander qu'on me les propose je vous assure que mon choix partira du cœur et que je me veorai au comble de mes vœux.

cette milice, monsieur le comte, serviroit du moins à faire montre faire du bruit, faire peur, pendant que vos françois feroient du mal; leur genre de combattre est si éloigné de celui dont nous avons ici endormi les anglois que leur de Rhode island en seroient surement etourdis.

je pars demain pour la ville ou se rendent les troupes. c'est dimanche qu'on compte attaquer si l'on est prêt. vous voyés qu'on a le tems de vous faire passer du renfort si vous repondés tout de suite. cette lettre vous sera remite par mr de gouvion dont je vous ai deja parlé et que je vous envoïe pour vous rendre compte de la partie de l'isle qu'il a vu, en même tems qu'il en reconnoitre une autre partie. Mr de gouvion⁷ est aimé et estimé de toutes les personnes qui sont le plus faites pour en bien juger. il est accompagné par M^r de Noirmont⁸ officier françois qui meurt denvie de voir la flotte et que j'ai l'honneur de vous presenter.

quant je saurai que vous avés écrit pour les projets que vous m'avés fait l'honneur de me communiquer, je pourrai si vous le jugés à propos en dire un mot dans des lettres particulieres au president du Congress⁹ avec lequel je suis fort bien; pour le g^{al} Washington je vous laisserai lui en ecrire et alors il ne m'en fera surement un secret ; je voudrois seulement savior la datte de vos lettres pour m'arranger en consequence.

Pardon, et mille fois pardon, monsieur le comte, de vous tant ennuyer, j'ai cru qu'en ecrivant ma lettre vite je la ferois courte, mais ici l'interest national, l'envie de faire reussir la commission dont vous m'avés chargé, le charme que je trouverois à voir les françois à portée de faire le plus possible, tout cela parloit à la fois, et il n'est pas aisé de lempêcher d'être bavard. je vais me presser de finir en vous assurant, monsieur le comte, combien je suis sensible à vos bontes pour moi, et combien je vous suis sincerement et tendrement attaché

[Translation]

At Providence 5 August 1778

I arrived here last night, Monsieur Count, and spoke deeply this morning on the different points that you did me the honor of entrusting to me and on which I would be more positive if I had not found here an officer of earlier date in the person of Gen. Sullivan;¹ he has sent everywhere to gather provisions, some of which are on their way to the fleet;² orders have been given for baking biscuit in various places;³ you will be receiving a man who will point out to you a place more convenient for watering than the dried up wells that we are obliged to use. There will also be arriving to you some boats laden with barrels of water, which will take away the prisoners of whom you want to rid yourself; we shall as well look into making an example, as I hope, of the militia who robbed those that you had entrusted to them and to give them a distaste for this English custom; you will receive the fieldpieces, and the boats will also be sent, as well as the horses;⁴ finally, Monsieur Count, instead of six thousand bricks, I am assured that you will soon have twenty thousand of them.⁵ Would to heaven that our troops would increase in the same proportion as these bricks; but it seems to me that instead of fourteen thousand men we are scarcely counting on ten thousand at present, and they are not all arrived; tomorrow, however, the Continental troops will join those of the militia who are at the common rendezvous.

As for the chief concern, Monsieur Count, the one in which the success of the expedition, the amenities of the fleet, those of the land troops, in short, all the advantages that we should wish for, seem to you to be involved, I cannot boast of having greatly succeeded in my negotiation. The attack on a single point, the union of the American troops, and especially of the Continental troops, the encircling rectangle that can enclose the English, such are the articles that dominate our discussion. I represented that the enemy divided in a similar operation was much less to be feared, that several false, and two real attacks would give us this advantage, that the English would waste time in reconnoitering that they ought to employ in marching and fighting every time that we put them to do this same foolishness, and that, finally, every time that we made a landing we did not wait until almost everyone was ashore in order to land the best we had, as is proposed for our troops.

I also said that if providing a wing of the army was too much, you would content yourself with a detachment; that you leave to Gen. Sullivan the largest part of his Continental troops; that, in uniting to it a small number of militia, the whole making two or three thousand men, of which the junction with the French troops would assure to them an always certain protection and example, that this landing would be under the fire of the ships of the line and would put us within reach of them, by the same reason that he would be within reach of us, following the diagram I sent you. You will note, moreover, that if he does not accept the plan of attacking the redoubts at two points, he does not lose the advantage of the rectangle in question, and gives him even a more regular form in lengthening your side.

I finally added that not only was it to the fleet that we owed the expedition, since without it, there would not have been one at all, but that it was the assistance of the fleet that would determine its success at the moment of the attack. The noise and the effect of your thundering, the division of the points where they are to be feared, a body of troops of a considerable but however uncertain number lands under their protection and whose first steps inform the enemy that there are Frenchmen among them, this is the disquieting spectacle that we can offer the English, and of which they will be deprived if we hold slavishly to the colored plan that I have had the honor of sending you.

My ideas, Monsieur Count, struck neither General Sullivan nor General Greene⁶ as I would have wanted. You will see by the response of the first that if he sends you a reinforcement, it will be one so inconsiderable that he cannot get it into his head that I prefer it to the command of his wing of six thousand men because it procures me the happiness of finding myself under your orders and companion in glory of the French, my dear countrymen. Besides, he imagines that you will keep the command of the whole detachment, and he believes that I am of some usefulness to him that I myself do not perceive with this famous left wing.

I did not forget, however, to say that the French fleet was destined to play a great role in this affair, that our landing troops should be accounted for much; that if we would arrive on land in complete security it would not be inconvenient to alter the disposition, but that if there were some danger, the French had a right to profit by it, and that this would be the only mark of recognition they claimed. In either case, the landing should be made at the same time, and should be made in such a way that the two parties had whatever opportunities of distinguishing themselves that good fortune presented to them.

I understand that it is irksome for some people to see the beautiful speeches of the play performed by foreign actors; I feel that the French will eclipse their neighbors a little, and that the beautiful scenes of the play will be perhaps reserved for them. The attack by General Sullivan, although important, may be what one calls in the comedy a bit of a rehearsal in comparison to the spectacle that your fleet and your troops will be able to perform, but without requiring that the hearts that are not French beat with that emotion that I myself would feel in seeing the glory of my countrymen, I should be offended if they hesitated to make an arrangement that appears to me ought to serve to their advantage in bringing them closer to the place that they should occupy in this expedition.

General Sullivan does not find any difficulty after the landing troops are no longer under your immediate orders in that they come from the side that I shall have the honor of commanding. But all that does not at all resemble the plan that you were kind enough to communicate to me. The idea that your troops would come ashore after the landing was assured does not appear to me in any manner acceptable. As to the number of the detachment that he offers you, I told him that considerable or not, I would like the command of it, and that the pleasure of fighting under the eyes of my countrymen would not be compensated by all the wings in existence, that, besides, I would take back the number of troops due me when I joined up with him. I swear to you that I would not like to see the French troops with people whose foreign hearts would not feel their value.

This part of my letter is immense, Monsieur Count, but I wanted to report to you what I said, to repeat what they responded to me, and to make known what I believe I perceived. Now I request your permission to add what the little familiarity I have of this country makes me hope. Your plan appears to me very far from being lost. If in your answer to General Sullivan you repeat it as appearing to you necessary for the success of the expedition, adapted to your desires and to the wishes of those who are under your orders, if in joining to it your military reflections you are pleased to press them with firmness, these gentlemen will find it easier to give in to than respond to them, and then they will increase the detachment that they are willing to give you. Their number is not fixed in the letter from General Sullivan; you appear certain of at least two thousand men, of whom a half or a third will be Continental troops. If to that you join the kindness of asking for me the command of them or at least of asking that they offer it to me, I assure you that my choice will come from my heart and that I shall fulfill my fondest wishes.

This militia, Monsieur Count, will serve at least to make a show, to make some noise, to create fear, while your Frenchmen do some damage; their kind of fighting is so far from that by which we have here put the English to sleep that those on Rhode Island will surely be astounded by it.

I leave tomorrow for the city where the troops are going. It is on Sunday that we count on attacking, if we are ready. You see that we have time to send you a reinforcement if you answer immediately. This letter will be sent to you by M. de Gouvion,⁷ of whom I have already spoken and whom I send to you to report on the part of the island that he has seen, at the same time that he reconnoiters another part of it. M. de Gouvion is liked and esteemed by everyone who is in the best position to judge him. He is accompanied by M. de Noirmont,⁸ a French officer who is dying to see the fleet and whom I have the honor of presenting to you.

When I know that you have written in favor of the plans that you did me the honor of communicating to me, I shall be able, if you judge it appropriate, to speak a word of them in private letters to the president of the Congress,⁹ with whom I am on good terms; as for General Washington, I shall leave it to you to write to him of them and then he will surely not keep them a secret from me; I would want only to know the date of your letters in order to make my arrangements in consequence.

Pardon, and a thousand pardons, Monsieur Count, for boring you at such length, I believed that by writing my letter quickly I would make it short, but here the national interest, the desire to make the commission with which you have been entrusted succeed, the pleasure that I would find in seeing the French achieve the most they can, all that spoke at the same time, and it is not easy to stop from being garrulous. I will push myself to finish in assuring you, Monsieur Count, how much I am sensible of your kindnesses to me, and how much I am sincerely and tenderly attached to you

By the news received yesterday evening from the northern part of Rhode Island, it appears at least doubtful that the enemies have evacuated the works at the point. Although the descent ought to take place 5 miles above the known forts on this side, it would be to fear that our preparatory movements might indicate the projected place, and that they might raise a battery that could make our descent difficult; or even impossible, if the frigates that you have in the East Channel were not strong enough to extinguish the fire.

General Sullivan¹ in order to forestall and evade every obstacle to his descent desires thus; my general, that the frigate the *Engageante*² which carries 12s, or the ship of the line the Sagitaire,³ if it is not too much advanced beyond the point of Conanicut (if this new arrangement does not interfere with your own) could pass into the East Channel, and advance up to the point of Sypoyt⁴ or nearly, it would protect and ensure his descent.

The pilot that he sends you on this subject has sounded the channel himself and responds with the surety of the ship of the line as to the depth.

Mr. De la Fayette, who arrived yesterday evening, bearer of one of your letters for General Sullivan, proposing a division of the Continental forces, & their union with the French troops, in order to ensure the operations and impose on the enemy in obliging them to divide itself, writes you by the same courier; he reports to you of General Sullivan's response;⁵ & General Sullivan himself has the honor of writing you on the subject, and on several others. General Sullivan has opened a correspondence with the commanders of the frigates in the East Channel. If the Engageante, which carries 12s, could be sent there, in case the battery suddenly appears, it would run less danger, says General Sullivan.

Colonel Laurens⁶ not having sent you that which I have had the honor of writing you, sends his respects.

Sir.

In consequence of your Letter dated the 4th of Aug^t which I receiv'd the 5th. at 4 AM, as well as Copy of a Letter from Sir Robert Pigot informing you of his Intentions of withdrawing the troops in Case the Enemys Ships should enter the Harbour he therefore wished the Advanced Ships might have Orders to retire within the Garrison.¹

I am to inform you that; [I] Immediately dispatched the 1st Lieu^t2 with your Orders to the Ships above me and got the Ships under Sail, intending to work Nearer the Town at which time two of the Enemys large Ships³ hauld round the North End of Connanicut and Stood directly for the Cerberus, which Obliged me to put about and Stand toward Rhode Island, as I found he continued her Course (coming between the halfway Rock and the South End of Prudence) it was impossible for me to Tack again without falling into his hands, and as your Letter directed me to Act as circumstance might require, and to avoid being capturd or the people taken Prisoners I immediately Embarked all the Men in Boats, except myself two Lieu^{ts}. and Master with a boats crew, and Run the Ship on shore under Potters House (where we knew the Water was Deep close too) to cover the Boats and as soon as they were landed cut away the Masts and set fire to her in five different places and then left her without a Single Man lost, or hurt, and in three quarters of an hour she blew.

I am sorry to Inform you that the Sixty four Gun Ship⁴ who stood for us was too Near me, to attempt saving the people's hammocks a Second trip would have been too dangerous, They have therefore, as well as myself and Officers, lost most of their Cloaths and Bedding. I am [&c], Jn^o Symons

DIARY OF CAPTAIN FREDERICK MACKENZIE, BRITISH ARMY

[Extract]

[Newport, Rhode Island]

5th August.

Thick foggy weather.

Wind S.W.

The weather too thick to admit of our seeing the French fleet....

About 5 this morning the two French ships¹ which came first into the Narraganset passage got under way and stood round the N. point of Connonicut, towards The Cerberus Frigate,² which lay under the W. side of this Island, nearly opposite the opening between Connonicut and Prudence. On seeing them in motion the Cerberus slipped her Cable and endeavored to get down to the town; but finding, that in standing over to Connonicut (as she was obliged to turn down) she must have run across the headmost of the Enemy's ships, which approached fast, Captain Symmons was obliged to run her on shore behind Redwood's, and set her on fire. All the Crew got safe on shore. The ship blew up about 8 o'Clock. One of the French ships stood in and fired some shots at the Cerberus's people, but without effect. She then tacked, as if intending to run down towards the town, which being perceived by The Juno,³ lying near Codrington's Cove, she was set on fire also, and blew up soon after. The Crew were all landed.

The Orpheus,⁴ Lark,⁵ and Pigot Galley,⁶ observing the other French ships coming up between Prudence and this Island, were immediately run on shore; the Orpheus at Almy's point, and the Lark and Pigot at Freeborn's Creek, where, after the Crews had landed, they were set on fire. The Orpheus blew up about 7 o'Clock; the others not till near 12.

The French ships, seeing the service they came upon effected, returned about 9 o'Clock, and anchored off the N. point of Connonicut.

The Explosion of some of our Frigates was very great, particularly that of The Lark, which had 76 barrels of powder in her Magazine. The house of one Wilcox in the Swamp, near which The Lark blew up, was set on fire by some of the burning pieces of wood which flew from her, and was totally consumed in a short time. Some pieces of burnt wood fell in the Redoubt at Windmill hill.

Some books and papers belonging to The Orpheus, were found three miles from the place where she blew up.

It was a most mortifying sight to us, who were Spectators of this Conflagration, to see so many fine Frigates destroyed in so short a time, without any loss on the part of the Enemy.

A great number of small Sloops and Schooners, all Rebel Privateers, have been plying about the whole morning on the W. side of the Island. About 11 o'Clock four of them anchored close off the wreck of The Orpheus, and sent their boats on shore in order to pick up what they could find: about 20 men landed from them, and straggled about on the shore. I happened about that time to be going down the hill on horseback to observe the effect of the Explosion, and was much surprized to see the vessels at anchor with the 13 Stripes flying. I returned immediately to General Smith,⁷ and got his permission to bring down 2. 6 p^{rs} with a party to cover them, which was done in about half an hour. As soon as they saw our Guns unlimbered, they got under way, (their boats having gone off as soon as they saw the Guns coming down) and made off with great expedition under the E. side of Prudence, where they anchored. We fired 28 Shot at them, some which struck them....

The Crews of the burnt ships are at present lodged in Newport. An Encampment is to be marked out for them near the town.

CONTINENTAL MARINE COMMITTEE TO THE CONTINENTAL NAVY BOARD OF THE EASTERN DEPARTMENT

Gentlemen

[Philadelphia] August 5th 1778

Since our last of the 24th Ultimo, we have received yours of the 17th and 22^d to which we shall now reply.¹

As we shall Often want small Vessels for Packets we desire you will order three Schooners to be built of about 50 or 60 Tons burthen and let swift Sailing be the Object—M^r Peck² may be employed to exercise his Talents in constructing One of them. We are glad to hear of the arrival of the Schooner Loyalty as you will perceive by our last we had reason to fear She had fallen into the hands of the enemy.³ We hope the Schooner Swan Captain Stiles will arrive Safe.⁴

We inclose herein A Resolve of Congress passed yesterday directing a Compensation of 500 Dollars to be made to M^r Storey the Clk of your Board for his extra Services and expences since his appointment which you will please to pay him. You will also find another resolve of Congress allowing you 365 dollars each for travelling expences in visiting the different parts of your department for the year past which we hope will be deem'd sufficient.⁵

We are very sorry to hear of the misfortune that had befallen the Schooner Ranger—We have no doubt but you will duely attend to have such things as have been Saved from her applied to the public Account.⁶

The Prices you are obliged to give for Cordage are indeed very extravagant, but at this time we cannot remedy that evil as the Ships that are now built must be fitted out. It will be an Object with us when we order Other Ships to be built to provide their materials on the best terms. We hope the Warren has gone to Sea and that the Raleigh will shortly follow her⁷—We wrote by yesterdays post to the Governor and Council of Massachusets to aid you in Manning the ships at Boston, which we expect they will do, and that you will thereby be enabled to send out the Vessels very Shortly.⁸

We have directed the Paymaster of this department to send you a State of Lieutenants Morans Account.⁹ M^r Trevet was at York Town when Congress were there, but went off without making any application.¹⁰

We have already sent you by M^r Dodd 200,000 Dollars, and wish we could now Send you the remainder of the Warrant granted by Congress for your department.¹¹ The Treasury hath not yet got money sufficient for that purpose, but in a few days we expect to get the balance which shall be immediately sent forward together with the Money for M^r Bradford's Bill.¹² We are with regard [&c.]

P.S: you will in future send forward the proceedings at large of all Courts Martial—at present those relative to Captains Manly and McNeill are wanted; please to send by the first opportunity.—¹³

12. John Bradford was Continental agent in Massachusetts.

13. On 29 July, Congress referred to the Marine Committee a petition from Hector McNeill to overturn the decision of a court-martial recommending his dismissal from the Continental Navy. On the same day as this letter, the proceedings of Capt. John Manly's court-martial were referred to the committee. See Journal of the Continental Congress, this date, above.

MARYLAND COUNCIL TO PRESIDENT OF THE CONTINENTAL CONGRESS HENRY LAURENS

In Council Annapolis 5th Aug^r 1778.

Sir.

We yesterday received a Letter from M^r Richard Harrison from Martinique, advising us of his Sale of the Sloop Molly belonging to this State, to M^r Bingham.¹ Knowing that M^r Bingham is Agent for the congress and presuming that the Purchase was for the Benefit of the United States,² we inclose you Copies of our Instructions to the Captain and of our Letters to M^r Harrison, beyond which he had no Authority.³ In Justice to this State we cannot confirm the Sale and have wrote a Letter to the Captain, now gone up to Baltimore in the Sloop, of which we inclose a Copy,⁴ not doubting but the Congress, on being apprized of the Circumstances of this Affair, will immediately order the Vessel, if purchased for them, to be delivered to our Order. We request the Favor of you Sir to lay this Matter before the Congress and to acquaint us with their Determination.⁵

We are &^{ca}

Maryland Archives 21: 176–77.

1. The letter from Richard Harrison, Maryland's agent in Martinique, dated 18 July, announced the sale of the Maryland State Trading sloop Molly to William Bingham, a merchant and the Continental Commercial agent in Martinique. On the same day as their letter to Laurens, the Council wrote the Maryland delegates in Congress apprising them of the sale. In that letter they said that Harrison had sold Molly, with its six four-pound cannon, for $2,500, adding "We cannot agree to the Injury or Example." Maryland Archives 21: 177.

2. On 18 Aug., Maryland Delegate to Congress George Plater wrote Gov. Thomas Johnson Jr., that "it does not appear that Mr. Bingham purchased" the sloop Molly "for the Continent." Letters of Delegates 10: 482.

3. See Maryland Council to Capt. Daniel Deshon and Maryland Council to Richard Harrison, both dated 15 May, in NDAR 12: 359–60 and 360.

4. On 5 Aug., the Council wrote Capt. Daniel Deshon that while they were working out the matter with Congress, for whom they assumed Molly was purchased, Deshon should "not lay out any Thing on the Vessel or give her out of your Hands without our Orders." Maryland Archives 21: 177–78.

5. On 14 Aug., a more chastened Council wrote its delegates in Congress that they believed Harrison's desperate financial situation, brought on by the state's having not paid its debts in Martinique, had caused him to sell Molly. In order to relieve Harrison and repay those debts the Council asked the delegates to purchase bills of exchange on France "to the Amount of 2400 £ Sterling." Maryland Archives 21: 186.

State of Connecticut

By The Governor & Comman^r in ChiefTo Samuel Smedly Esq^r Captain and Command^r of the Ship Defence belonging to this State—

You are hereby ordered, with all possible dispatch, to fit and clean the Ship under your Command, now lying in the Harbour of Boston—to take in such necessaries and provisions as are wanted for a cruize, and so soon as you have enlisted so many hands as you shall judge safe to proceed on a Cruize, immediately to proceed to Sea, from the Port of Boston and at your good discretion to cruize on these Coasts from s^d Port, and so on to the Southward, either off Newport, in the Sound, or off Sandy Hook, or elsewhere, and to fill your Compliment of men at such places, as to you shall seem most likely—on the best, reasonable, and customary terms—

Inclosed is a Resolution of myself, and Council of Safety, whereby you are enabled to call on Sam^l Elliot jun^r Esq^r Agent for this State, for all things necessary in the concerns of the Ship, and for cleansing and fitting her, and for provisions for your Cruise—¹ Given at Lebanon 6th. Aug^t. AD 1778

LB, Ct, Jonathan Trumbull Papers, vol. 27, Letter Book II (1778–1779), pp. 44–45.

1. The resolution follows, immediately below. The same day, Trumbull wrote Samuel Eliot Jr., informing him that he was to expedite the sailing of Defence and cover Smedley's charges, adding, "How you are in Cash am unable to judge—The order I had on our Treasurer in your favor have done nothing upon, hoping you would not have occasion for it, after the coming in of the Two last Prizes. Hope you are able to supply the money necessary." Ct, Jonathan Trumbull Papers, vol. 27, Letter Book II (1778–1779), pp. 41–42.

JOURNAL OF THE CONNECTICUT COUNCIL OF SAFETY

AT A MEETING OF THE GOVERNOR, &C. AT LEBANON, AUGUST 6TH, 1778, SATURDAY.

Present: His Excellency the Governor.

Jabez Huntington,	Jed ^h Elderkin	} Esq ^{rs} .
William Williams,	William Hillhouse
	David Mumford,

Voted, That Capt. Smedley of the ship Defence be empowered and directed to fit and clear his ship at Boston, where she now lies, as soon as may be, and that Mr. Elliot, agent for this State, furnish Capt. Smedley with such articles and materials as he shall stand in need of. And the time of service of the hands on board said ship being expired, Capt. Smedley is directed to settle and adjust their accounts, and pay and discharge the balances due to them respectively; and he is hereby authorized to receive such sums of money at the hand of Samuel Elliot jun^r, Esqr, agent for this State, as shall be necessary for that purpose—which said Mr. Elliot is directed to pay and deliver on account of this State, taking proper receipts to be accountable.

It is further resolved, That Capt. Smedley be and he is hereby directed to reinlist his hands, or otherwise engage, as soon as may be, a sufficient complement or crew of hands for manning said ship, on the best terms he shall be able, and not exceed reasonable and customary. And as soon as he can be manned and fitted, to sail immediately on a cruise at discretion, on these coasts, from Boston and so on the southward, till further orders. And Mr. Elliot is directed to furnish him with provisions and necessaries for that purpose, on account of the State. Captain Smedley is not to wait at Boston longer than to get a number of men safe for him to go round with; that he proceed accordingly and find men afterwards to fill his complement.¹

Hoadly, ed., Public Records of the State of Connecticut 2: 108–9.

1. Smedley would not receive these orders before he sailed from Boston to New London. Samuel Eliot Jr., to Gov. Jonathan Trumbull, 27 Aug., 1778, Ct, Connecticut Archives, 1st Ser., vol. 9, p. 174.

MAJOR GENERAL JOHN SULLIVAN TO GENERAL GEORGE WASHINGTON

Head Qr. Providence. Aug^t 6 1778.

Dear General.

I have the honor to inform your Excellency that some time since three of the enemy's frigates quited their former stations—sailed to the North end of Rhode-Island and anchored between Dyers Island and Bristol ferry—Count d'Estaign on the 4 Inst. meditated an attack upon them, and on the 5th issued orders that two of his ships should turn the North end of Connanicut Island and give them battle. These orders they proceeded to comply with, but on their approach, the English frigates were set fire to, abandoned, and entirely consumed, without making use of any means of defence, or shewing the least appearance of resistance. Their names & force have not yet been ascertained, but when known, shall be transmitted to your Excellency.¹

I am sorry to inform your Excell^y that the motions of the militia are exceedingly tardy. I have been but inconsiderably reinforc'd by the militia of Connecticut, nor do I expect much from them—Those of New Hampshire & Massachusetts I am Informed are on their march and have reason to expect them by saturday next.—²

Your Exc^y may rest assured that I shall make every previously necessary preparation for their reception, so that no time be lost between their arrival and the immediate execution of our intended invasion—I have the honor to be &c &c

John Sullivan

PS. I have this moment learned from certain intelligence that four frigates and one tender were destroyed.—

J'ay Reçu Ce matin à 9 heures la lettre que vous m'avés daigné mécrire, & je me hate en vous Rendant grace des bontés dont vous voulés bien m'honnér de Vous Faire agréer les assurances Respectueuses de ma Réconnaissance & de ma Sensibilité—mon desir ardent de justifier votre bienveillance ne peut etre egalé que par le Régrets de m'enavait pû trouver L'occasion encore.

J'ay Communiqué Comme vous me l'avés permis, à m^r le general Sullivan,¹ partie des deux lettres, des commandans des deux fregates de L'est.... Ses esperances sur la facilité, & à succès de la descente en sont accrués, & son émpressement m'en à parû augmenté.

que ne peut il Communiquer aux exécuteurs de ses ordres & son ardeur & son activité. mais Ce n'est pas une vertu du climat, on s'assemble toujours lentement, et les milices du Connecticut ne sont pas encore arrivées.—les generaux sullivan, green,² & la fayete,³ me paraissent déterminés à descendre lundy sans attendre les traîneurs.

Le general sullivan & green desireraient si vos arrangemens maritimes le permettent, que lengageante,⁴ ou le *sagittaire*⁵ protageat leur descente par le chenal de l'est. Lenemy que n'a pas de bateries sur la Cote au point projeté pour la descènte pourrait se Raissér, & le feu mêmê éloigné d'une baterie, dendroit la passage difficile, confus & peutêtre impossible.

il parait certain que l'on à Coulé bas entre les iles de goat & de Rose, onze vaisseaux de transport quelques nrs assés gros, mais le chenal y est fort large & fort profond.⁶ Celuy entre la pointe de dumpling,⁷ & lile de Rose est libre, & facile, & les vaisseaux peuvent à votre choix poursuivre Leur Route nord, ou tourner à L'est, sur la baterie au de Pres de Newport.

on craint que lobstruction du chenal entre Rose & goat iland, ne permette pas à vos vaisseaux de prendre la position ou ils eussent pû prendre les ouvrages enemys, d'enfilade, & en Revés. si bourage sur dominy hill,⁹ peut être enlevé, Coupe, ou évacué; les ouvrages inferieur sont nulls, & on n'en tenterait d'être pas la défense.

m^r le generaux green & Varnum,¹⁰ m'ont proposé d'allér avec moi sur la Cote de l'est pour une Réconnaissance, si elle Leur donne quelques lumiere sur les projets de defense de l'enemy, J'aurai l'honneur de vous en Rendre Compte.

Je ne puis vous Rien assuré sur le nombre des milices, elles arrivent si éparses, que leurs officiers eux même n'en sçauront le nombre que sur Rhode Iland. J'ay l'honneur d'etre [&c.]

My general

Noon, 6 August, Providence

At 9 o'clock this morning I received the letter that you deigned to write me and I hasten, in rendering you thanks for the kindnesses with which you have been so good as to honor me, to offer you respectful assurances of my recognition and of my sensibility—my ardent desire to justify your benevolence can be equaled only by the regret that I have not yet been able to find the occasion for it.

I have communicated, as you permitted, to General Sullivan¹ part of the two letters from the commanders of the two frigates in the east His hopes for the facility and the success of the descent have accrued from it, and his excitement regarding it appears to me increased. If only he could communicate it to those who execute his orders and his ardor and his activity! But that is not a virtue of the climate, they assemble still slowly—the militias of Connecticut have not yet arrived. Generals Sullivan, Green,² and la Fayette³ appear to me determined to descend Monday without the stragglers reaching them.

General Sullivan & Green desire if your maritime arrangements permit it that the *Engageante*⁴ or the *Sagitaire*⁵ would protect their descent by the East Channel. The enemy who does not have any batteries on the side at the point projected for the descent could erect some, & even from a battery at a distance, render the passage difficult, confused & perhaps impossible.

It appears certain that they have sunk between Goat and Rose Islands eleven transport ships and several rather large ships, but the channel there is very large & very deep.⁶ The one between the point of dumpling,⁷ & Rose Island is free, & easy, & the ships of the line can at your choice pursue their route north, or turn to the east, on the battery close to Newport.

Mr. de Pléville⁸ received your orders, having foreseen them beforehand, & will report to you on the execution.

It is feared that the obstruction of the channel between Rose & Goat Island does not permit your ships of the line to take the position in which they would be able to take the enemy works in enfilade, & in reverse. If barraged on dominy hill,⁹ perhaps remove, cut off, or evacuate; the inferior works are worthless, & there is no intention of defending them.

Generals Green & Varnum¹⁰ have proposed to me going with me to the eastern side for a reconnaissance, if it give them any light on the defensive plans of the enemy I shall have the honor of reporting it to you.

I am unable to assure you on the number of the militias, they arrive so irregularly that even their officers do not know the number that are at Rhode Island. I have the honor to be [&c.]

S^r:

In consequence of your Letter dated the 4 Ins^t which I received the 5^h between 4 & 5 AM by the 1st Lieu^t of the Cerberus as well as a Copy of a Letter from S^r Rob^t Pigot informing you of his Intentions of withdrawing the Troops in case the Enemy's Ships should enter the harbour he therefore wish'd the advanced Frigates might have ord^s to retire within the Garrison.²

I am to inform you that prior to the receipt of yours, Two of the French line of Battle Ships which lay off the North End of Connannicut was under Sail and standing in between Prudence and the half way Rock, and that I had the Topsails of his Majestys Ship Orpheus under my Command Set,³ and ready to weigh, but as it was flood Tide and the wind up the River, it was impossible for me to pass the Enemy, without falling into their hands, as your Letter directed me to Act as circumstances might require, and to avoid being Captured, or the People taken Prisoners, I got under Sail and embarked all the Men in the Boats, Except myself, 1st Lieutenant Carpenter⁴ and a Boats Crew and Run the Ship on Shore a little to the Eastward off Dyers Island and set her on fire in Seven different places, and then left her, without a Single man lost or hurt, and in 3 Quarters of an hour she blew up.

I am sorry to inform you that the Enemy was too near me to attempt saving the People's Hammacks; They have therefore as well as myself and Officers, lost most of their Cloaths and Bedding.

DIARY OF CAPTAIN FREDERICK MACKENZIE, BRITISH ARMY

[Extract]

[Newport, Rhode Island]

6th August [1778].

Fine weather, but very hot. Wind W.N.W.

Four French line of Battle ships were in the Narraganset passage last night.¹ The remainder of The French fleet without continue in the usual position.

Two Officers of the 54th Regiment who were bathing this morning opposite the French frigates in the Seconnet,² had three Cannon shot fired at them from one of them. We thought this an Action very inconsistent with French politeness.

Many movements of boats on the Rebel shores to day; but particularly from the several parts of Mount-Hope bay, towards Howland's ferry, where the Rebels appear to be assembling in considerable numbers.

Several small Privateers plying about on the W. side of the Island. They landed about 20 men under a Lieutenant at Stoddard's about 1 o'Clock, and plundered his house and Potter's, taking almost every thing they could lay their hands on, and beating and ill-treating the Women. Some of them told Stoddard they only waited for the arrival of the remainder of the Militia, to attack the Island. As soon as some small parties of ours were sent out, they retreated on board their vessels.

The Kingsfisher having left a boat on the E. shore of the Island when the French frigates came into the Seconnet, nine men of Brown's Provincial Regiment³ deserted in her this day, and went on board the Frigates.

We are using every means in our power to obstruct the approach of the Enemy by Sea and land, in case they attack us; and it is fortunate, that, by their remaining so long inactive against the Island, they have given us time to do so. Several large Transports have been sunk off the North Battery and Goat-Island; so that no line of Battle ship can bring up nearer to them than 800 yards. Trees have been felled at Green-end, and Abbattis are forming round all our Redoubts, and from Greenend, quite round to Tomini hill. Two small Redoubts with Cannon in them, have been constructed on the high ground at the entrance of Brenton's Neck, that in case a body of men should be landed from the Fleet, the access to the town on that side may be rendered more difficult.

Everything in front of our Redoubts which can afford any cover to the Enemy in their approaches, is clearing away. . . .

The Crews of the burnt Frigates have been formed into a Corps under the Command of their own Officers, and detachments therefrom have been stationed at the different Batteries.

Lieu^t D'Auvergne⁴ of The Navy is appointed Major of Brigade to the Corps of Seamen.

Mackenzie, Diary 2: 331–33. Two paragraphs, one on the inhabitants of Newport and one on Mackenzie's family, have been omitted.

1. The Narragansett (or West) Passage. The French vessels were ship of the line Provence, Capitaine de vaisseau Victor-Louis Desmichels de Champorcin; ship of the line Protecteur, Capitaine de vaisseau Etienne-Joseph de Saint-Germain, chevalier d'Apchon; ship of the line Fantasque, Capitaine de vaisseau Pierre-André bailli de Suffren de Saint-Tropez; ship of the line Sagittaire, Capitaine de vaisseau François-Hector, comte d'Albert de Rions.

2. Sakonnet River, also called the East Passage.

3. Mackenzie refers to the Prince of Wales American Regiment commanded by Brig. Gen. Montfort Brown.

4. Lt. Philip D'Auvergne, who formerly commanded the armed galley Alarm, which was burned on 30 July.

7 August at 5 o'clock in the morning at Providence [R.I.]

My general

I have the honor of sending you some questions that I believed should be made to General Sullivan¹ and his written responses.

Q. 1st what is the day? the hour? the place of the descent?

A. M. the Count d'Estaing is informed about it. If any change were indispensable, I would inform him of it.

2. Q... what will the signal be that will announce to the French troops that one had begun the descent? . . has landed? . . and marches?

A.... a white flag raised at Tyverton,² and repeated at Bristol Ferry, by the fort . . the signals will be able to be seen from Newport—

3. Q... after the landing, will the French troops march directly on the enemy? Or will they cross part of the island in order to join the Americans?

A. if M. the Count d'Estaing approves it, they will join the Americans to march on the enemy together.

4. Q. if M. the Count d'Estaing judged it appropriate to enter the day before the descent, in order not to have at the same time to extinguish the fire of the batteries and land the troops, would Gen. Sullivan have any objection?

A.... None, and I see no inconvenience; on the contrary.

5. Q. what signal will announce to Gen. Sullivan that the French troops have landed, and are marching?

A... that they have landed a white flag at the mainmast. that they are marching—a Red.

6. Q. where are the draft horses, for the artillery, and the saddle horses for M. the Count d'Estaing and his aides?

A.. they are with Lamois, bridles, and saddles, at the place assigned for M. the Count d'Estaing.

7. Q. where are the Bricks for the ovens?. What is their number?... where are the boats?. Their number?

A.... 20,000 bricks were delivered on the 5th to Mr. Ashley. The boats left with Captain Clark,³ to the number of 40.

There is everything that my notes furnish me, in order to clear up the affaire a little. General Sullivan wants me to leave in the morning to come report to you on his answers; but I asked him to find it good that I follow him to tyverton, where he is going today; & there receive his final orders, which could not fail to be more précis on the places.— He states that he will be ready to descend on Sunday.— Generals Green⁴ and Varnum⁵ say Monday . . . as soon as it is determined, I shall hasten to come report it to you, but I shall let go only at the last moment, and my horse will shorten the route. I have the honor to be [&c.]

LIEUTENANT COLONEL JOHN LAURENS TO VICE-AMIRAL COMTE D'ESTAING

Je suis au desespoir mon General de vous dire que le General Sullivan² se trouve obligé de remettre l'entreprise à lundy s'il n'avoit pas l'esperance des renforts qui sont en route—Des canons qui ne sont pas encore arrivés et le grand nombre d'arrangemens qu'il a à faire par la lenteur de miliciens seroient de raisons suffisans pour qu'il ne donnât encor le tems d'un Jour—Il ne comte encor que deux mille miliciens assemblés ici—quelques compagnies independantes qui viennent de Boston nous renforceront plutôt par la valeur que par le nombre—mais chaque moment pour ainsi dire non, Donnera plus d'hommes et plus d'ordre Nous aurons suffisamment de bat[tre.] Le Gen¹ Sullivan et le Gen¹ Green³ croient qu'il faut plutôt hasarder l'entreprise avec moins de mond[e] que d'attendre plus long tems que lundy—nous avons grande espoir que l'ennemi suffribrira par la desertion des que nous débarquons[,] c'est plutôt une consolation, qu'un bon raisonnement militaire—que on doit juger par les risques que leurs soldats courent pour s'échapp[er] actuellement qu'il viendront en foule, des qu'il n'y aura plus d'e[n?] entre les deux armées—

Un sergent & neuf hommes qui sont venus aujourd'hui—nous disent qu['ils] ont coulés à fond 12 bâtiments entre Goats Island & Dyers point,⁴ et qu'i[ls] en ont. encor prêts pour jetter d[ans] le Canal—par la largeur du passage ces obstructions ne nuisent en viser au progrès de la Escadre—ils ajoutent que les soldats manquent extrêmement de farine—et que toutes les troupes allemandes sont gardées dans l'intérieur d l'isle comme de gens dont on soupçonne la fidélité—

Je suis avec M^r. de fleury⁵ comptant qu'il seroit possible de vous rendre comte de ce que se passe a terre, et de retourner à tems pour savoir les progrès ulterieurs et vous en faire nos dernier rapport—mais la distance rendant notre projet impraticable—il vous écrit au long, et je prens la liberté de vous marquer que malheureusement le pouvoir du General Sullivan n'egale pas son zele et son Ardeur—La Lenteur des Mili-ciens est invincible. Nous parlerons demain après midi aussitôt que nous aurons aprit quelques nouvelles plus satisf[illeg.] que celles que nous rendons actuell[ement] et nous aurons l'honneur de fair notre raport et de prendre vos ordres—

Je sens bien par mon me[me] Mon General l'inquietude que tous ces delais doivent vous causer—mais j'espere que voilà le dernier qui retient la couronne de lau-riers americans qui doivent ceindre la tete du Comte d'Estaing. J'ai l'honneur d'être [&c.]

[Translation]

On board the Aimable,¹ 7th of August, 1778.

I am in despair, My General, to tell you that General Sullivan² finds himself obliged to put off the enterprise to Monday if he does not have the hope of the reinforcements that are en route. Canons that are not yet arrived and the great number of arrangements that he has to make by the slowness of the militia are sufficient reasons for his not yet giving the time of day. He still counts only two thousand militia assembled here—some independent companies that come from Boston will reinforce us rather by their valor than by their number—but each moment for thus saying, no, will give more men and more order; we shall have enough to win. General Sullivan and General Green³ believe that one must rather hazard the enterprise with fewer people than wait longer than Monday—we have a great hope that the enemy will suffer from desertion when we disembark, this is rather a consolation than a military reason—that one should judge by the risks that their soldiers will run in order to escape now and that they will come in crowds when there will less distance between the two armies.

A sergeant and nine men who have come today tell us that they have sunk 12 ships between Goats Island and Dyer's Point,⁴ and that they have ready to throw into the channel along the length of the passage obstructions to impede the progress of the squadron—they add that the soldiers are extremely short of wheat—and that all the German troops are kept in the interior of the island like people whose loyalty is suspect—

I am with M. de Fleury⁵ counting that it will be possible to report to you what happens on land, and of returning in time to know the latest progress and give you our latest report of it—but the distance renders our intention impracticable—he writes you at length, and I take the liberty of informing you that unhappily the power of General Sullivan does not equal his zeal and his ardor. The slowness of the militia is invincible. We shall speak tomorrow afternoon as soon as we have learned more satisfactory than what we render now and we shall have the honor of making our report and of taking your orders—

I feel deeply, My General, the inquietude that all these delays must cause you—but I hope that, behold, in the end the crown of American laurels should encircle the head of Count d’Estaing. I have the honor to be [&c.]

I have sent you a very small boat, not being able to procure another at the moment. It appears to me very important that you be informed promptly that the landing cannot take place tomorrow, Sunday morning, as General Sullivan¹ hoped. Messrs. Laurens and Fleury² are sending you an account more detailed than I can in this regard, for I have the honor to observe to you that General Sullivan has always responded to me in the same manner, which is that I will be informed of the time and of the place when the time comes. This afternoon I saw General Greene,³ who has been as reserved with me. It appears to me, however, necessary that I know the dispositions for the boats for the landing, that we agree on signals for having them depart when I believe that the landing will be practicable; it may be that the enemy will put up no resistance, or after having destroyed the obstacles that oppose us; I also desired a favor if we do not count on making the intended attack, if it would not be appropriate to disquiet them by the separation of two frigates. General Greene appeared to me to desire that we reunite, such, I have the honor to tell you, My General, is forethought on my part, for I dare believe that the English do not concern themselves at all with opposing the landing; at least nothing appears at the two places on the coast that we see perfectly that can make us believe it, and the deposition of many of the Englishmen who have deserted the island appears to confirm it.

. . . Messrs. Laurens and Fleury propose to leave for the squadron tomorrow at noon. I shall have the honor of reporting to you more particularly through them. It will be difficult for me to give them a boat other than the one I am sending you, and if the breeze is so strong that it cannot be employed, if you judge it appropriate to provide them with a stronger boat, those gentlemen will be assured of being able to depart. At a Consultation held by Major General Sir Rob^t Pigot. Commander in Chief of His Majesty's Forces; Major General Prescott. Brigadier Gen^l Smith; and the Captains Brisbane, Smith, Dalrymple, Hudson, Symons, Harmood, & Christian. At New Port August the 7th 1778. at 6 in the Even^g.¹

Question By the General Officers.

Whether the Ships in the approach of the Enemy by Sea can be defended:–

Questions by the Gen Officers

First. Whether landing the provisions, Cannon & Stores will be beneficial

- to the King's Service
 Answered It will
- Second. Whether destroying the Ships in the Harbour by Fire will not endanger the Town & Store Houses.
 Answered Most Certainly both Town and Store Houses will be in the utmost danger: and therefore Scuttling & Cutting away the Mast is most proper.
- Thirdly. Whether sinking Transports,² without Goat Island, and the North Battery will be of material Service.
 Answerd. Yes, and the sooner it is put in Execution the Better:—

[Extract]

[Newport, R.I.]

7th Aug^t [1778] Clear weather. Wind S.W.

At 6 this Morning two of the French ships in the Narraganset passage got under way, and stood down towards the Fleet. At 8 one of them anchored half way down the back of Connonicut. The other joined the ship which lies nearest off the Mouth of the harbour. This movement gives us hopes that they have received intelligence of the approach of Lord Howe, and are drawing their line of Battle ships together. The rest of the Fleet continue in the usual position. . . .

Many large boats, with Troops, tents, Stores, &c. &c. came to Howland's ferry this day from Taunton River, and behind Mount Hope. Few or no people appear opposite Fogland, or to the Southward of it, but about Howland's all the houses are full of Troops. . . .

Small armed Sloops or Boats have been dispatched almost every night since the arrival of the French fleet, with letters to Lord Howe and Sir Henry Clinton, giving them information of our situation as well as that of the Enemy. Some of them will doubtless arrive safe.

The Marines of The Frigates are now embodied under the Command of Captain Coutts of that Corps.¹ They are encamped by themselves, and take a part of the duty of The town, amounting to 1 Captain 2 Sub^s and 60 men.

We are all extremely anxious for some account from Lord Howe or a sight of his fleet, in the Offing. If he has the number of Ships with him which we are told he has, and is acquainted with the position of the Enemy's fleet, we think he will soon appear. When we reflect how much is at stake, we cannot pretend to blame him for not seeking the Enemy until the force of his fleet gives him a certainty of success. If he should, by a precipitate attack, be defeated in an action with the French fleet, the consequences are obvious and dreadful;—no less than the certain loss of this Island and the Force on it, and probably that of a great part of our troops in America, as by losing our superiority at Sea, the Enemy would have it in their power to deprive us of all supplies from Europe, and the posts we hold in the Vicinity of New York could not afford subsistence for the Troops there for three Months. The loss of a great part of our Naval force in America, and that of a large fleet of transports, attending the Army, which would necessarily follow a defeat of our fleet, would lay the Nation under almost insurmountable difficulties, and throw such a damp upon the spirits of the people at home as might lead to the loss of our American Colonies. As Admiral Byron is daily expected on the Coast with a fleet of large ships, and as from our force and situation we may be expected to make considerable efforts and prolong the defence of this Garrison, we cannot blame Lord Howe for waiting to be joined by such a number of Admiral Bryon's ships as will give him a decided superiority over the Enemy's fleet.² He would deserve censure should he make a precipitate attack on the Enemy, and hazard so much, when by waiting for a short time he may have it in his power to give a capital blow to the Naval power of France, & the hopes of America. It seems to be the general opinion that the French [fleet] is in a very dangerous position, should Lord Howe appear with a Superior Fleet, as the Wind now stands. It is conceived that in that case, their safety would consist of forcing their way into this harbour.

I think it may with safety be averred, that if our force now in the Island, is drawn together within the position which The General³ has determined to take for our defence, we may, by a proper exertion of it, bid defiance for at least ten or twelve days to the united force which may be brought against us. There can be no doubt but Lord Howe will appear before the end of that period. . . .

With such a considerable extent of Coast to defend without shipping of any kind, and the practicability of the Rebels landing a considerable force on Common fence & Howland's Necks, without our being able to prevent them, we cannot expect to repel the attacks of the Enemy should they make them in several places at once. A complete defeat of one attack would not prevent the success of others; and by our waiting to repulse the attack which would be made on the most advanced part of the Island, the other attacks on our flanks would gain the time they would require to cut across our rear, and prevent our retreat to the town. Any attack made from Bristol or Howland's ferry, will be false, and intended to amuse us, while troops land behind us; for we cannot suppose that the Rebels will attack several Redoubts defended by British troops, and fight their way the whole length of the Island, when they have it in their power to land within 3 miles of our Lines, under cover of the French ships, and have a Battalion at most to oppose them. It is probable their plan is, to make two principal landings, one on the E. side near Holmes's, and the other on the W. side near Stoddard's. The position of the French ships in the passages seems to favor this opinion. It is probable a false attack would be made about two hours before daybreak on our advanced posts at Bristol-ferry, Common-fence, and Howland's bridge, which would take off our attention from the principal attacks, which would land about day break, and immediately endeavor to form across the Island, and possess the roads leading to town. Their having the entire command of the water renders this very practicable; and the consequences are obvious. The two Regiments at Windmill-hill dare not quit their post without the utmost hazard; and before the whole could be assembled in order to retire in a body to Newport, the Enemy on the E. & W. sides would be in possession of the position they intended to take; and the General would not have time, nor could he venture, to move with any considerable part of the troops from the town to take a post to cover our retreat. Our situation will appear more dangerous and critical if the French fleet should at the same time force their entrance into the harbour, and make an attack on the town.

We may generally form a judgement of the Enemy's intentions by what is obviously his interest to do. In this case it is to divide our force, if possible cut off a part of it, and to accelerate the reduction of Newport. Our great object should therefore be, to collect our force in due time, which will render us formidable, give us confidence, and enable us to make every possible effort to protract the defence of the post committed to our charge. Every hour we keep the Enemy off is of the utmost consequence; as it gives time to Lord Howe to collect his force and appear before the Enemy's fleet; and we all have such confidence in His Lordships zeal and abilities, that we are satisfied he will do all that is possible for the relief of this place, upon which so much depends. Should we, by injudicious measures, or a weak defence, fall into the power of the Enemy before he has done what is possible for our relief, we must lose our honor for ever.

Next Saturday the 8th of this month, or the days following if the weather does not permit, as soon as the breeze will give way, signals for weighing will give notice to get under sail, when the eight Ships of the Line named above may maneuver to place themselves in their designated post; and they will attempt to be sufficiently formed in order to give in the pass by the third tack they run the maneuver of the general; & the signal (to force the passage in the same order,) will leave no doubt on the instant.

The ships of the line will be paired together, each consort-ship of the rear will be at half a cable's length from a consort-ship of the van; but there will be an interval of two cables between each division of two ships.

The ships, and the divisions will keep themselves with the greatest exactitude in the waters of those that precede them, and run through the same route.

They will make in passing the greatest fire possible against the enemy batteries and ships; humanity engages to recommend sparing the city to the extent possible, without, however, that this attention to beneficence may injure the military objective, that is to say, the direction and the activity of the firing. Brentons Point, Goat Island, the ships and frigates at broadside, boats at whatever distance: These are the objects they will have to beat.

As Rhode Island will be the last and might be at very close range, it is particularly [important?] to pay attention to its defenses. All the [illeg.] The due promptitude. Successive firing. Each ship of the line will have its longboat and dingy well-armed to its larboard and toward the rear, in a manner to be covered from fire by the ship, where it will be ready to be lowered by cable, in order to go to the high rocks and to intercept all fire ships. The long boats and dinghies will be provided with grappling hooks with chains and all the means necessary to fulfill missions so important to the conservation of the king's ships of the line. Each long boat will be commanded by the Third Lieutenant of his ship of the line, the large dinghy by the first ensign, and the second dinghy, if there is one, by a guard de la marine at the choice of the captain. The sails will be calculated on that of the ships of the line at the head, and on the consonance of the distance; each ship of the line will allow to itself in the route all the small changes of bearing or luffs that will put it in the condition of seeing better and of firing more. The firing once begun it is hoped will not cease an instant until there is absolutely no more target. They shall make no signals; if an absolute necessity compels it, they should seize the moment that the smoke is less great, and they will exert themselves to discover the flags that the generals may find themselves forced to hoist. The largest number of soldiers will be employed in serving the cannon.

If the sea and the wind determine that we weigh during the night in order to enter at daybreak, the state of the sea will alert if the weather can, and the night signal for weighing [illeg.] an instant & without cannon shots will suffice for getting under sail.

VICE-AMIRAL COMTE D'ESTAING TO MAJOR GENERAL JOHN SULLIVAN

N^o. 8.[au large de Rhode Island, 7 août 1778]

Monsieur

J'ai l'honneur de vous informer que les Officiers g[énéraux ?] et que le conseil que j'ai assemblé en consequence des indications contenues dans deux lettres de M. de Fleury,¹ ont été d'avis que la fregate L'*Engageante*² et que le Vaisseau la Provence de 64.³ Canons fussent prests à recevoir vos ordres et les pilotes que vous juger à propos de leur Envoyer, pour les faire remonter dans le chenal de L'Est, Jusqu'au lieu destiné pour votre descente. La Provence pompera Son Eau, S'allergira autant qu'elle pourra l'Estre; Et J'ordonne à M. de Champourein qui commande ce navire, de débarquer s'il le faut une partie de Son artillerie pour mieux Employer contre les Anglois, cequ'il [en] conservera. Le *Sagitaire*⁴ est trop avancé vers le nord du Channel de L'Ouest pour estre rapellé dans celui de L'Est, Cette difficile manœuvre causeroit de trop grandes Langueurs. La Provence se toue actuellement pour vous rejoindre, parceque M. Brown⁵ que je me Suis Empresse de croire, m'avoit conseillé d'Envoyer deux Vaisseaux du nombre desquels est ce bâtiment, pour fermer le passage aux fregates que le *Fantasque*⁶ et le Sagitaire ont fait bruler dans le Nord du Channel du Milieu.

Les mouvements maritimes dependent trop des vents et le point du jour etant l'heure où il y en le moins, Il Seroit a craindre que la double diversion de notre attaque par mer et par terre ne pût S'executer au même Instant que votre descente, Si nous n'etions pas dans le chenal du milieu et un peu au vent de l'endroit indiqué. J'enterai Samedy dans le Chenal Si le vent est favorable et Je comte m'y porter en traversant le port avec huit Vaisseaux. Le Fantasque et le Sagitaire nous rejoindront autant qu'ils le pourront par la passe du Nord de Connonicut, Et le Protecteur de 74-Canons⁷ restera seul en rade devant la passe du Milieu pour Empêcher les Secours ou la fuite. Comme cette position necessaire, ne laisse pas que d'estre hazardée à certains Egards, parcequ'elle me devise en quatre, Je me Flate que l'instant de L'action ne Sera plus Eloigné.

J'ose esperer que votre Excellence et que les Officiers Generaux qui servent avec Elle, me mettront à portée de rendre compte au Roy et au Congrès du nombre et de la bonté des Troupes que vous aurez Joint aux François. Ce Detachement dont Je n'ai garde de vous indiquer la force, parceque dans tous les cas nous tâcherons au besoin de nous Suffire à nous mêmes, est la premiere occasion dans laquelle Messieurs les Generaux des Etats-Unis, peuvent donner une preuve authentique de L'Alliance de sa majesté Et de La Satisfaction avec laquelle ils Joignent leurs Troupes aux Siennes. L'Officier chargé de la conduite du detachement en conservera le Commandement total. Je lui indiquerai Seulement les positions et les mouvements que ceux de L'Ennemi et les lieux exigeront. Lieutenant general depuis plus de dix ans des armées du Roy, J'espere que d'après vos ordres, Il voudre bien recevoir mes avis Sur ces objets Seulement. J'imiterai Si le Local le permet Le plan de Tactique que vous avez preferé en Formant une Colonne de flanc, que servira si vous le Jugez convenable à nous reunir facilement par une Evolution Simple.

Il me Sera impossible, Monsieur, d'attendre que vous Soyez Debarqué pour descedre; vos Troupes cessent par fois d'estre obeissantes, lorsqu'ils croyent leur honneur compromis; permettez moi de vous dire que votre proposition est militairement inadmissible. Nous considerons la bravoure des Anglois mais nous ne craignons pas leur desespoir; ce sera la Sixieme fois que J'aurai l'honneur de commander une descente chez Eux.⁸ L'Experience m'a appris q[u'on] falloit estre à Terre le plutót possible, pousser vivement ce qu'on trouve devant soi avec cequi est débarquer et Ensuite ne prendre poste que pour attendre et former le reste.

Le Secour mutuel se charger par derriere ou [le?] flanc L'Ennemi qui porteroit Son plus grand Effort Sur l'un de nous deux, est parfaitement bien vü. Je m'y conformirai. L'heure de débarquement est bien choisie. vous voudrez bien m'envoyer cacheté le mot [de] ralliement; comme ce n'est que pour le bonheur de L'amerique que Sa Majesté Fait la Guerre Anglois, nous ne Sommes qu'auxiliaires; Et c'est par consequent à votre Excellence à m'envoyer le mot. Les meprises Sont terribles; nous ne Saurions prendre trop de precautions pour les Eviter. Quand vous n'auriez qu'un piquet de 50. Ou de 30. Hommes à cheval, bien ou mal montés n'importe, pour venir nous instruire que vous etes a Terre; cela seroit de la plus grande utilité. Notre Jonction ne peut estre ni trop prochaine ni trop certaine. Me. Le M^{is} de La Fayette L'assure par la connoissance que lui et que Ses aides de Camp François ont des deux services. C'est un des motifs qui m'a fait changer d'avis à son Egard, et c'est en partie ce que m'oblige à vous faire des Excuses de Lui avoir donné L'idée de se separer un moment de vous et de quitter pour un Instant le commandement d'une de vos Ailes. Il y Joindra celui des troupes François lorsque nous Serons unis; Et comme Il est naturel qu'il le desire ; cela lui donnera une plus grande ardeur pour operer notre Jonction.

Si vous n'etes pas prêt, Je formerai mes Troupes probablement Dimanche. L'Isle de Connonicut paroît L'Endroit le plus convenable. Le plutót ouú votre detachement m'y Joindra Sera le mieux: sa vue augmentera les Inquietudes de L'Ennemi; Il vous en opposera moins de forces. Il Seroit bon aussi de lui faire appercvoir des samedy des bateaux plats entrain dans le Channel du milieu à la suite du fantasque et du Sagitaire. Je vous Supplie d'en donner l'ordre, Et J'exige monsieur, comme votre Confrere, que vous defendiez absolument à Messieurs Laurens⁹ et de Fleury ainsi qu'a tous Messieurs Les Ameriquains qui voudroient entrer avec nous, de venir Sur aucun des huit vaisseaux. Je vous avertis qu'ils Se presenteroient inutilement, on ne les laisseroit pas monter abord. S'ils veulent Se trouver avant le Jour Sur le Fantasque ou Sur le Sagitaire, Ils en Seront les maitres; Ils Seroient placés par là aux premieres Loges et Seroient même utiles pour ordonner de L'apparition et du Lieu de relâche des bateaux plats, ainsi que de L'arrivée des Affuts de campagne et des deux pieces de fonte que vous avez la bonté de m'annoncer. La nouvelle communication pour l'eau, les vivres, et notre correspondance exigent aussi quelquien que parle les deux Langues, qui connoisse les moyens et qui a le droit de commander aux americains, mais Je le repette, personne ne Sera reçü qu'abord des deux vaisseaux designés. J'ai l'honneur d'estre [&c.]

7th August 1778.

Sir

I have the honor to inform you that the General Officers and the Council which I assembled in consequence of the indication contained in M^r Fleury's two letters¹—were of opinion that the Frigate *Engageante*² and the Ship Provence of 64 Guns³—should be ready to receive your orders—and the Pilots which you may think proper to send them—to carry them up the eastern Channel to the place appointed for your descent—The Provence will be lightened by pumping and other means—I have even ordered M^r Champonrin who commands her, to disembark if necessary, part of his guns—that he may employ the remainder to more advantage against the English—The *Sagittaire*⁴ is too far advanced up the West Channel, to be recalled and stationed in the eastern this difficult manœuvre would occasion too much delay—The Provence is now touring down to rejoin us because M^r Brown,⁵ in whom I confided had advised me to send two Vessels one of which was this, to block the passage of the two frigates which the Sagittaire and *fantasque*⁶ caused to be burnd in the North part of the middle Channel. Naval movements depending much on winds—and day break being the calmest time—we should have reason to fear that the double diversion of our attack by land and water, could not be executed at the moment of your descent—unless we were in the middle channel, and a little to windward of the place appointed—I shall enter that passage on Saturday—if the wind is favorable & my design is to lay the harbour across with eight ships—The fantasque and Sagittaire will rejoin us—as soon as possible by the pass at the North end of Cononikut—and the Protector of 74 Guns⁷ will remain single in the Road—before the main channel, to prevent either reinforcement or flight—as this necessary position is hazardous in many respects, because it divides me into four—I flatter myself that the moment for action will not be deferred—

I dare hope that Your Excellency and the General Officers who serve with you, will put it in my power to give an account to the King and to the Congress of the Number and goodness of the Troops that you shall have joined to the French—This detachment the number of which I will not undertake to point out—because on all occasions we endeavour when it is necessary to be sufficient to themselves—is the first occasion on which the Generals of the United States have it in their power to give an authentic proof of the value which they set upon the alliance of His Majesty, and the satisfaction with which they join their troops to his—the officer Charged with conducting the Detachment—will preserve the intire command of it—I shall only point out to him the movements and positions that those of the Enemy—and the Ground will require—Having been Lieut General for ten years past—in the King's Armies—I hope that in pursuance of your orders, he will be pleased to receive my directions in these respects only—I shall imitate, if the ground permits, the plan of tactics which you have chosen,—and form a flank column which will serve if you think proper to effect our union by a very simple evolution.

It will be impossible for me Sir to delay my disembarkation, 'till your descent is made—our Troops, at times, cease for a time to be obedient when they believe their honor compromised; permit me to say to you that your proposition is militarily inadmissible. We consider the bravery of the English but we do not fear their despair; this will be the sixth time that I will have the honor of commanding a landing among them.⁸ The experience has taught me that one must be ashore as soon as possible, push lively what is found in front of oneself with what is disembarked and then take post only to await and form the rest.

The mutual aid of attacking by the rear or the flank the enemy who will bring his greatest effort to bear on one of us two, is well seen. I shall conform myself to it.

The hour of disembarking is well chosen. Please send me under cover the word for rallying; as it is only for the happiness of America that His Majesty wages the English war, we are only auxiliaries, and it is in consequence up to your Excellency to send me the word. Misunderstandings are terrible; we cannot take too many precautions to avoid them. When you will only have a picket of 50 or of 30 horsemen, well or badly mounted it does not matter, to send us word that you have landed; that would be of the greatest utility. Our junction can be neither too soon nor too certain. Monsieur the Marquis de La Fayette will ensure it by the knowledge that he and his French aides-de-camp have of the two services. It is one of the reasons that has made me change my mind in his regard, and it is in part what obliges me to make excuses to you for having given him the idea of separating himself from you for a moment and of quitting for an instant the command of one of your wings. He would join there that of the French troops when we unite; and as it is natural that he would desire it; that will give him a very great ardor for effecting our junction.

If you are not ready, I shall form my troops probably Sunday. The Island of Con-nicut appears the most convenient location. The sooner your detachment joins me here the better: seeing it will increase the enemy's worries; he will oppose you with fewer of his forces because of it. It would be good also to have him see on Saturday some flatboats entrain in the Middle Channel behind Fantasque and Sagitaire: I ask you to give then the order, and I require, sir, as your colleague, that you prevent absolutely Messieurs Laurens⁹ and de Fleury, as well as all the American gentlemen who may want to enter with us, to come aboard any of the eight ships of the line. I give you notice that they would present themselves uselessly, they would not be allowed on board. If they want to find themselves before the day in the Fantasque or the Sagitaire, they will be able to do so; they would be placed there in the first cabins and would even be useful for ordering the appearance and the place of putting in of the flatboats, as well as of the arrival of the field gun carriages and of the two iron cannon that you had the goodness to promise me. The new communication for the water, the provisions, and our correspondence require also someone who speaks the two tongues, who knows the ways and who has the right to command the Americans, but I repeat it, no one will be received except aboard the two designated ships of the line. I have the honor to be [&c.]

LIBELS FILED IN NEW JERSEY MARITIME COURT, 7 AUGUST

To all whom it may concern:

New-jersey, ss. NOTICE is hereby given, that a Court of Admiralty will be held at the Court-house in Trenton, on Thursday the 27th day of August inst. at ten o'clock in the forenoon of the same day, then and there to try the truth of the facts alledged in the bills of Captain Joseph Cook, (who as well, &c.) against the schooner or vessel called the Hawke, lately commanded by Philies Provinsal—The sloop or vessel called the William, lately commanded by William Hobbs—And the brigantine of vessel called Governor Henry, lately commanded by William Arthur. Of Captain Edward Turner, (who as well, &c.) against the brigantine or vessel called the Nancy, lately commanded by James Club. Of Captain David Stevens (who as well, &c.) against the schooner or vessel called the John and Sally, lately commanded by Rufus Gardner.¹ Of Yelverton Taylor, (who as well, &c.) against the sloop or vessel called the Lucy, lately commanded by William Gandle—The schooner or vessel called the Caroline—And the sloop or vessel called the Lark.² Of Enoch Stillwell, (who as well, &c.) against the sloop or shallop supposed to be named the Marydunceo: with their respective tackle, apparel, furniture and cargoes: To the end and intent that the owner or owners of the said vessels respectively, or any person or persons concerned therein, may appear and shew cause, if any they have, why the said vessels and their cargoes should not be condemned according to the prayer of the said bills.

By order of the judge,
BOWES REED, Pro. Reg.³

The New-Jersey Gazette (Trenton), 12 August 1778.

1. David Stevens commanded the private sloop-of-war Chance. The New Jersey Court of Admiralty would award the prize schooner John and Sally to John Henderson and others, members of the schooner's crew, who, having overwhelmed its master and seized control, were navigating the schooner toward shore when the Chance intercepted and captured it. Stevens appealed the ruling to Congress, where the Committee on Appeals upheld the decision of the New Jersey court. Letters of Delegates 12: 186; DNA, PCC, RG 267, case file no. 35.

2. Yelverton Taylor commanded the private sloop-of-war Comet. The court awarded the Lark, John Laing, master, to Taylor and Timothy Shaler, commander of the privateer boat Chance, finding that the two privateers had captured the sloop on the high seas bound from St. Christopher to New York. The owners, Richard D. Jennings and Robert Campbell, of St. Eustatius, asserting that the Lark was bound from St. Eustatius to Egg Harbor, New Jersey, with supplies for the Americans, unsuccessfully appealed to Congress. Letters of Delegates 14: 378; DNA, RG 267, case file no. 36.

My Dear Count

I receid your Excellency's favor of last Evening¹ & delay'd answering it till I would Examine a little into the number & Conditions of the Troops arrived on the Ground; This prevented me from giving your Excellency an answer Sooner. I have concluded to Send your Excellency the marquis de La Fayette with about twelve hundred troops, The light Corps of the Grand army composes a part of them[.] The Marquis will wait on your Excellency tomorrow afternoon with the Troops & receive your Instructions[.] I have wrote to the Captain of the *Engageanté*² to come into the East Channel. The Ship Provence which your Exc^y. was polite Enough to order me I shall stand in need of & have notified the Captain.³ I shall review our troops in the morning & send you by the marquis the Signals we shall give when we Embark, as also the parole—The Marquis will also inform you of the moment of our Embarkations as nearly as possible & the various delays I had in forming an army out of militia. You will please to Embark your troops When the Signal is given and land as Soon as possible; we Shall push to Join you & we doubt not Every Effort will be used your Exc^y. to form a Junction with us. I shall do every Thing in my power to prevent mistakes—the horsemen you were pleased to mention shall be formed, I Shall Send the detachment in the boats in the manner your Excellency proposes tomorrow, which as you Justly observe will have the Good Effect of dividing the Enemy's attention & distracting them, I Shall observe the direction you give with respect to Col^o. Fleury⁴ & Laurens⁵ & other not going onboard the Eight Ships,⁶ but going onboard the *Fantasque*⁷ or Sagittaire.⁸ I have the honor to be[&c].

My general on board the Aimable,¹ at midnight 8th August

The long and useless letter that I had the honor of writing you this morning was only to have said to General Sullivan² what I feared he was obliged to do. That is to say, that his descent was not possible Sunday and was delayed until Monday. I wanted to be authorized by him to inform you sooner, but he deceived himself and it was not until this evening that he acknowledged the impossibility of his descent on the day that his desire, rather than his means, had marked.

As I feared that my attempt to indicate in my letter this unfortunate delay was insufficient, and that after the pronouncements of General Sullivan, contradicted solely by my deeds and hazarded conjectures, you might believe all arranged, & would go there in consequence...since which I have been able to obtain from him the admission of inability to do it on the designated day, I have run on board the Aimable with Col. Laurens,³ from where we have the honor of reporting to you in the name of General Sullivan.—

“that the militias so assured have arrived only to the number of 15 to 18 hundred. .that the Continental troops of M. de la Fayette and Sullivan united do not amount to three thousand, & that it is to be feared that the number of troops at the moment of descent may not be more than 5 thousand.

I have perhaps ventured well, my general, to avow to you some fears, that the day of tomorrow may deceive...but the arrival of the militias yet expected is so uncertain, that it is probable that I will be only too justified in my conjectures, by their delays and their absence.—Nevertheless, whatever may be the force or weakness of our troops, Generals Sullivan and Green⁴ are determined to attempt the descent on Monday morning.—General Green does not despair, General Sullivan hopes & I share his confidence, as does Mr. Laurens.—

I have passed on board the Aimable in order to obtain a boat to come to report to you, to receive your orders, & to return to land to seek news and more satisfactory information. But M. de St. Come has told me, the voyage and the return so long, that fearing I would miss tomorrow morning, I have decided in concert with Col. Laurens “to return close by General Sullivan tonight to receive the news of tomorrow to see, to determine irrevocably the uncertain operations of the American army, and hasten in the evening on board your ship to report to you and receive your orders.—

All the Continental troops have come to Tiverton, Rhode Island, Generals Sullivan and Green are four miles below. There is no lack of boats...a few independent companies are presented in the place of the militia.—& their courage supplements their number. I have the honor to be [&c.]

Mon general

Le general sullivan,² m'ordone de Vous Rendre Compte.

"que puisque vous voulés bien Lui accordér, un jour de grace, après tant D'autres, pour être sur de ses opérations, il craint d'etre obligé d'en profité; mais que le Rétard de lundy à mardy peut tiriér ses forces. quiqu'il en puisse être, mon general, jour ou nuit vent ou Calme, en Canot ou à la nage, j'arriveray sur votre bord 12 heures avant Celle fixé pour la descénte. Le general De la fayète à obtenû Ce matin, à la lecture d'une de vos lettres qui paraissait L'exigér, un Corps de mille hommes, qui tournant la pointe nord de Rhode iland iront joindre les troupes française sur Cononicut, ou sur votre escadre pour les commandér sous vos ordres.

Il s'embarque demain à mydy, & sera vérs le soir à cononicut. M^e De la fayète sera tel Le seul, mon général; à qui le nom de français assurera des occassions & des moyèns de gloire. L'obscur & zelé fleury ne pourrait il se flatter, tandis que vous lui confiés le commandemént de toutes vos troupes, deglanér apres luy quelques volontaires.— Votre lettre écrite à mr. le general sullivan, & la sorte d'exil que vous imposies à mr. Laurens³ & à moi en nous banissant de votre bord, nous avais accablé, de découragement & d'anxiétude.—le general sullivan pour nous Consolér, avait accordé à mr. Laurens & à moy en Commun, 300 Volontaires, y compris ses gardes, qui devaient faire l'avant garde; je laisseray à mr. Laurens notre corps commun, pour venir vous Rendre Compte; le Rejoindrai je seul, mon general, ne m'accorde vous pas quelques français d'escorte...quelques bas officiers, (sans officiers à qui je commanderais avec Retenue & qui m'obeira peutétre avec Repugnance.) pour les Contenir. The 8th [August 1778] at 5 o'clock in the evening, on board *Amiable*¹

My general

General Sullivan² has ordered me to report to you

“that ... since you are pleased to agree with him, one day of grace, after so many others, perhaps on his operations, he fears he is obliged to profit by; but that the delay from Monday to Tuesday can draw out his forces. Although it might be so, my general, day or night, wind or calm, in dinghy or swimming, I shall arrive on board your ship 12 hours before that fixed for the descent. General de la Fayette obtained this morning, at the reading of one of your letters that appeared to need “a corps of one thousand men, who turning the north point of Rhode Island will join the French troops on Cononicut, or on your squadron in order to command them under your orders. He will embark tomorrow at noon, & will be toward the evening at Cononicut. Mr. de la Fayette will go by himself, my general; to whom the name of Frenchman assures occasions and means of glory. The obscure & zealous Fleury is not able to flatter himself, whereas you confide the command of so many of your troops to him, to glean after him a few volunteers.—your letter written to General Sullivan, & the kind of exile that you impose on Mr. Laurens³ and on me in banishing us from your ship, have weighed us down with discouragement and anxiety.—General Sullivan to console us has accorded to Mr. Laurens and to me in common 300 volunteers, including among them his guards, who should make advance guards; I shall leave to Mr. Laurens our common corps, in order to come report to you; I would rejoin him, my general, you not according me a few French escorts ... a few lesser officers (without officers whom I would command with restraint and who would obey me perhaps with repugnance.) to control them. This mixed corps under two heads united in friendship and interest in glory, could it not serve as advance guard and as forlorn hope to the two armies?—what glory for us if we could contribute to yours ... your approval would be our pride, & neither Mr. Laurens nor I fear paying too dearly, with all our being, he for glory, & the liberty of America, & I for the success of my two countries, & yours.

I have by the order of General Sullivan written this morning to the captain of the *Engageant*⁴ that the bearer was a pilot for the East Channel, where he asks him to enter to join M. de St. Come, & protect the American descent; to the captain of the Provence,⁵ that the few forces of the enemy on the coast, might not render by his necessary aids; & that he might join the *Protecteur*⁶ at the passes, or to ask you for immediate orders.

The majestic noise of the Languedoc,⁷ making its entrance into the enemy road, ignites our Courage, we strain our ear and eye toward you, passing in triumph before Newport, & leaving after you a long silence & torrents of smoke arising from Carthaginian ships on fire. Obtain, my general, the success that you so well merit, & permit me, as a Franco-American, to bask in your glory, even though I have not shared in it.

Mr. Hancock⁸, gouty, aged, and infirm, reanimated by the only energy of the soul, arrives at the head of a company of volunteers, and says better than Sophronius,⁹ “your grief is nothing when you separate me from glory,” his example and his heroism have not had all the effect that I had hoped from it for the honor of the American souls ... my general, on land as at sea, great souls have more admirers than imitators.

The army passes in review tomorrow. I shall count the boats, the cannon, and the men, & I shall send you an express, or [illeg.] I have the honor to be [&c.]

Sir

One day or even three more employed in waiting for brave people, such as the Americans from Boston,¹ appear to me, as to your Excellency, not to be wasted. I foresaw that you would find it impossible to act tomorrow; you should have seen that by my letter, and you will pardon me for not believing too much yet in Monday. I ask you with the greatest earnestness to send to me an officer on the evening before the morning that you will land; it will be enough to dictate to him a note of any new dispositions, any changes in the means that you will have and in your plans. Flag signals that would indicate the landing completed will not be seen if the fog is like today. It stops me, but I hope that it will dissipate. I am ready to force the passage. The *Engageante*² has received no order from you. It will, at every hazard tomorrow morning go into the East Channel, and the *Provence*³ will follow it. This latter ship of the line is still warping to get out of the West Channel. I fear that the *Protecteur*⁴ may leave the road without a ship of the line for 24 hours. I have the honor to be [&c.]

at three o'clock we went into the pass² in order to force the entrance, the *Languedoc*³ at the head, as soon as we were in range of the batteries they fired at us taking us by the front without being able to respond to them. We attempted the first fires for 15 to 20 minutes without being able to fire, receiving balls on board without having anyone killed or wounded—we thundered at the batteries as soon as we were able to fire—and the whole squadron the same, that is to say eight ships⁴. The four others being in the West Passage that had gotten under sail to join us in turning the Island of Conneticut⁵ by the north. The English had sunk several transport ships near the city to prevent our getting near it⁶—part of their masts were out of the water—at half past 1 o'clock we anchored under the Island of Conneticut outside the range of the batteries to prepare the next day to land four thousand men, soldiers and sailors. The General⁷ at the head to attack the English troops who were in the number of six thousand.⁸ In concert with 9 to 10 thousand Americans under the orders of General Sulivant,⁹ who landed in the night on the island with a cast-iron field gun, and in the very night there had been skirmishes between small American and English detachments—as soon as we had anchored they set fire to a ship that was under the city that appeared to us of two batteries¹⁰—they had cut down the masts of a frigate pierced for 26 cannon in battery and had sunk it¹¹—they burned several storehouses¹². The *Sagittaire*¹³ and the *Fantasque*¹⁴ rejoined the squadron in the evening and anchored, all the ships parted an anchor to warp from aft in order to form the line. The night passed very tranquilly.

[Off Newport, R.I.]

Saturday 8.

In the morning the same weather, at 11 o'clock the fog had dissipated, and the wind had passed to the WSW, rather brisk, the General¹ made the signal to the 8 ships of the line to weigh anchor. At noon the entire squadron was under sail and ran a tack in the open sea, at 2 o'clock they wore again in order of battle in order to force the entrance of Newport; at 3 o'clock the squadron arrived between the points of Connecticut² and of Rhode Island in the following order: The 8 ships of the line formed 4 divisions on the same line; Viz., the *Languedoc*³ and the *Zélé*⁴ at ½ a cable length between them, next came the *tonnant*⁵ and the *hector*⁶ which observed the same distance between them, but the tonnant was at a distance of three cable lengths from the Zélé, after them the *Cezar*⁷ and the Marseillois,⁸ and finally the *Vaillant*⁹ and the Guerrier.¹⁰ Each of these ships of the line had its launch and its dinghy, in each of which was an officer, armed and towed from the side opposite of the enemy's fire, these vessels were intended to intercept the fire ships that the enemy should have been able to direct against the squadron, the execution of which the distances that prevailed between the ships of the line rendered very easy.¹¹

When the Languedoc had doubled Brenton Point, the batteries that were within range fired on it, but it did not respond to them until it was within range to make it as efficacious as possible, all the ships of the line imitated it, at length their fire was so lively and it followed that in an instant the batteries were dismantled and abandoned by the enemy; the ships of the line in firing in the same regard at the fort that was built on Goulet Island¹² and some batteries that fired on them from Rose Island and from solid land; the vessels that the enemy had sunk in front of the city prevented bringing broadside on against them, the General made signal to anchor in the same order of battle, except that the ships of the line lessened the distances between them, the *Fantasque*¹³ and the *Sagittaire*¹⁴ passed to the North of Conanicut and anchored in their posts; the *protecteur*¹⁵ and the provence,¹⁶ which the General had intended to guard the entrance of the port, warped in order to go out from the Western Passage;¹⁷

we followed next under sail, followed by the schooner Dauphin,¹⁸ in order to go moor in the Eastern Passage¹⁹ at the post that General Sullivan²⁰ had required that we be able to occupy; we quickly accomplished this, favored by a brisk wind from the SE, the Cape to the E ¼ SE.

Anchored in the Eastern Passage.

At 7 o'clock in the evening we anchored between the mainland and Rhode Island at the head of the Alcmene,²¹ of the *Aimable*²² and of the *Stanley*²³ in 5 fathoms, with a bottom of mud. We carried an anchor with a spring attached to the north in order to present to the shore as needed. We took our bearings the point of the east of the entrance S 5° E.

The point of the west where there is a battery to the SSW. 5° S.

Distance from the mainland and from the island 1/3 league.

At 8 o'clock in the evening M. De fleury,²⁴ aide de camp of General Sullivan, came aboard [to inform] the captain that the enemy having at the moment of the entrance abandoned some very important posts had brought about some changes in the dispositions of the American general, who had the plan of landing his troops the next morning.²⁵ This aide de camp gave me a packet from the American General with the most fervent prayer of sending it to M. D'Estaing, I immediately dispatched the dauphin to fulfill this purpose.

Note. As soon as the squadron set sail, the enemy, who had foreseen this design, blew up several storehouses that held a quantity of munitions of all kinds.²⁶

They also burned and sank several frigates or transports; here are their names:

The Salisbury, ship of 50 guns.
 A ship of 40.
 The Salisbury ship of 32.
 The Junon of 32.

Sir,

I have the honor of reporting to you that I weighed anchor at five o'clock in the evening, having seen the *Protecteur*¹ [and] the *Provence*² at the lighthouse. I anchored in the East Passage at seven thirty o'clock near the two frigates. I have seen Messrs. DIARY OF CAPTAIN FREDERICK MACKENZIE, BRITISH ARMY

[Extract]

[Newport, R.I.]

8th Aug^t 1778—All perfectly quiet last night. The Moon shone clear, and we could have easily perceived any movements of the Enemy's boats, had they been made.

Very thick at Sea this morning. Wind S.W.

At 7 this morning we perceived another Encampment of the Rebels, to the Northward of Howland's ferry: nearly opposite the N. point of Commonfence Neck. There appears to be about three Battalions there. Many large Batteaux are passing this morning from Mount Hope, to Howland's ferry. Not less than 100 of them have been observed within these few days going into Wanton's Cove.

At 6 this morning the two French ships off the N. point of Connonicut got under way, and stood over between that Island and Prudence; about 8 they had worked down as far as Gold Island,¹ when it was generally supposed they intended to proceed as far as the town to attack the N. Battery; but they soon after put about and run up the W. side of this Island, nearly as far as Dyer's Island; from whence they stood over again to Connonicut, and anchored about 10 o'Clock near the N. point, but on this side of it. There are two other Line of Battle ships in the Narraganset passage this morning.

The two Frigates in the Seconnet have made no movement since the day the Kingsfisher was burnt.²

About 10 o'Clock the haze cleared away, and we could see the French fleet at anchor off the harbour, exactly in the same position in which they have been for some days. About 11 o'Clock they got under way with their heads to the Eastward, and the Wind about S.S.W. At 1 they tacked and stood as if intending for the Narraganset passage; but when they had reached so far as to have the harbour of Newport open, they bore away for it with a croud of sail. Every thing in all our Sea Batteries being prepared for their reception, about 3 o'Clock, the French Admiral, Count D'Estaing, in the Languedoc of 84 Guns, leading in, came within shot of Brenton's-point battery, when the Action began. The fire from the above Battery, and from those on Goat Island, & the North Battery, was kept up with great briskness, and returned by a heavy fire from the ships as they passed. It was soon perceived that the Enemy did not mean to bring up against any of our Batteries; for upon getting within the Dumplins, they kept close over to the Connonicut shore, and stood up the harbour between that Island and Gold Island, and about 5 o'Clock they all anchored in a line under the Connonicut shore. The nearest Ship anchored about 3 miles from the N. Battery. It was conjectured that the sight of the Masts of the ships sunk in front of Goat Island, deterred them from bringing up off that Island.

The fire from the Batteries and the ships was prodigious, and formed a very grand Scene, even to us who were on the Northern part of the Island, at a distance of about 7 miles. Notwithstanding the fire of 8 Ships of the line, not one man was hurt on our side, nor was the smallest damage done to any of our Guns or Batteries.

No particular damage could be observed on board the French ships, except that the Foreyard of one of them was shot down; and the Halliards of the Admiral's Ensign being shot away, the Colours of that ship were for a short time down. The ships were struck many times from our Batteries, particularly that on Brenton's point.

The Cannonade continued without any intermission for an hour and a quarter.

It having been determined, that as soon as the French fleet came into the harbour, the troops at the N. end of the Island should be withdrawn, even though there should be no appearance of an attack from the Rebels, orders were accordingly given for it. . . .

Soon after the French fleet anchored within the harbour, the General³ gave orders for all the houses and buildings within reach of our Guns in the Redoubts of the outer line, to be set on fire; which was accordingly done, and about 20 were burnt.

While the French were coming in, orders were given by The Commodore to scuttle and sink The Flora & Faulcon; the former between the Long wharf and Goat Island, and the latter off the S.E. end of Goat Island.⁴

The Grand Duke Transport, formerly an East Indiaman,⁵ was run on shore between Goat Island and the N. Battery; and in a very inconsiderate manner set on fire, tho not further than 20 yards from the Wharfs, and near Storehouses in which a quantity of provisions and other stores still remained. She burnt with great violence, and greatly endangered that part of the town. Parties of the troops were employed most part of the night in preventing the adjacent buildings from catching fire.

The burning of the houses and the ship, the sinking of our only remaining Frigates, the sight of the Enemy's fleet within the harbour, the retreat of the Troops within the lines, and the dismay and distress so strongly impressed upon the Countenances of the Inhabitants, who concluded that the Rebels were on the point of landing, and that their lives and property were in the utmost danger, formed altogether a very extraordinary Scene.

A number of men from the French ships were put on shore on Connonicut soon after they anchored.

Parties of our Seamen have been employed in throwing down the Stone walls and fences in front of our Encampment.

GENERAL GEORGE WASHINGTON TO JONATHAN TRUMBULL, GOVERNOR OF CONNECTICUT

Head Quarters White Plains

8th August 1778

Sir

The Fleet at Rhode Island under the Count D'Estaing suffers many inconveniences in the procuring of Water. I could wish, in case you think it practicable, in case it can be any ways effected, that Vessels may be sent forward immediately from New London with a proper supply. From the situation of his Squadron with respect to water it is a measure, which, if undertaken, and executed with alacrity, cannot fail of being of the utmost consequence to the Count—It may prevent also accidents of a very alarming nature—Should he be obliged to put to Sea—You will, therefore, I hope, take the matter into consideration, and give it that attention which its importance demands. I am, [&c.]

8th Aug^r 1778.

Sir.

I received your favor dated the 4th Inst.¹ informing me of your arrival at Providence,² and the flattering disposition of things in that quarter.

We have just received an account from Gen^l. Maxwell³ of Lord Howe's sailing from the Hook with his fleet of armed vessels early on Thursday morning last. Whether it is to make demonstrations of fighting the Count d'Estaing, in order to favor the withdrawing or reinforcing of the troops on Rhode Island is not easy to determine. I would hope however that it is not to join a squadron from England, or if it is that your operations will be determined before they can act.

Wishing you all manner of success and glory, I am [&c]

P.S. you have referred me for particulars to a letter from Gen^l. Sullivan—no such letter came to hand.

GENERAL GEORGE WASHINGTON TO VICE-AMIRAL COMTE D'ESTAING

Head Quarters White

Plains Aug^r 8th 1778

Sir,

I had the honor last night of receiving your favour of the 3d instant.¹ I most sincerely sympathize with you in the regret you feel at the obstacles and difficulties you have heretofore encountered. Your case has certainly been a case of peculiar hardship; but you justly have the consolation, which arises from a reflection, that no exertions possible have been wanting in you, to insure success, the most ample, and most adequate to your wishes and to the important expectations from your command. The disappointments you have experienced proceed from circumstances, which no human foresight or activity can controul. None can desire more ardently, than I do, that the future may compensate for the past; and that your efforts may be crowned with the full success they deserve.

I have just received a letter from Brigadier General Maxwell, who is stationed in the Jerseys near Staten Island, dated yesterday at nine oClock in the forenoon. Inclosed are extracts from it, which contain very interesting information. The terms made use of are so positive and express, that it is natural to conclude the intelligence is well founded.² Its importance induces me to lose no time in communicating it.

What may be the real design of this movement can only be the subject of conjecture. Unless the fleet should have received advice of reinforcement on the coast, which it is gone to join, with intention to bend their united force against you, it can scarcely be supposed, that Lord Howe will be hardy enough to make any serious attempt with his present inferiority of strength.— If he should, it can only be accounted for, on the principle of desperation stimulated by a hope of finding you divided, in your operations against Rhode Island. This, however, is not a very probable supposition—It is more likely he may hope, by making demonstrations towards you, to divert your attention from Rhode Island, and afford an opportunity to withdraw their troops and frustrate the expedition we are carrying on.— I shall not trouble you with any further conjectures as I am persuaded, you will be able to form a better Judgment, than I can, of his intentions, and of the conduct it will be proper to persue in consequence[.]

In order to aid in removing the inconveniences you sustain in the article of water and relieve the sufferings of the brave officers and men under your command, whose patience and perseverance cannot be too highly commended, I have written to Governor Trumbull of the State of Connecticut, regarding his endeavours to collect vessels and load them with water at New London for the use of your fleet[.]³ I shall be happy if this application is productive of the desired effect.

I send you a New York paper of the 5th. which is not unworthy of attention.⁴

Allow me to assure you of the warm respect and regard with which I have the honor to be [&c.]

"I have to inform your Excellency, that early yesterday morning Lord Howe sailed out of the Hook with his whole fleet of armed vessels; They were out of sight in the afternoon, supposed to be gone for Rhode Island: no transports or troops are said to be gone with them. The Grenadiers and light infantry are certainly gone from New York and Staten Island to Jamaica-plains on Long-Island, and it is thought will proceed to the East End of that Island."

"Some transports are drawn up between Governor's Island and Yellow-Hook supplied with wood and water and provisions, about a sufficient number to carry three regiments—supposed to be destined for the West-Indies. The regiments said to be going, for they were not yet embarking, were the 7th 29th and 71st."

Minutes of the Proceedings . . .

The Court (being duly Sworn) proceeded to the Trial accordingly

Lieutenant William August Merrick's Narative

On the 10th: April last in the Evening, information was received on board the Galatea, that three Rebel Gallies,² with a considerable Number of Troops on board, were advancing to attack the Hinchinbrook and Rebecca Province Armed Sloop;³ I was immediately sent in the Pinnacle to the assistance of the Hinchinbrook; on my arrival on board her, a little after dark, She and the Rebecca were moved lower down the Creek, to a place that was thought more Advantageous to act in, and both Vessels being moored athwart the Stream, so as to Command the reach above them; we prepared for Action, and waited all night for the attack of the Gallies. At one ^aClock in the morning, a Brig⁴ with two Officers and thirty Seamen, which were sent from the Galatea joined us,— at the first dawn of day, we could see three Rebel Gallies about a mile and a half above us, rowing down the Creek, and having approached us, within range of their Shot, they commenced an Attack with one 18 Pounder, and one 12 Pounder from the Lee Galley, Two 12 Pounders from the Washington Galley, and two 9 Pounders from the Bullock Galley, as we were informed by some Deserters who came to us afterwards— it was Calm, and a Strong Ebb Tide running, so that not having it in our power, to advance Towards the Gallies, our Guns (four Pounders) were Totally Useless; in this Situation we lay near two hours, sustaining a very Gaulling fire, hoping that a Breeze of Wind would Spring up, and enable us to Board the Galleys, but it still continuing Calm, our masts and Rigging much disabled, and the Long boat sunk by the Enemies Shott, we were under the Necessity of moving our Birth, we therefore Weighed, and attempted to Tow the Hinchinbrook ahead against the Tide, but finding it ineffectual, we dropped lower down the Creek, the Galleys followed us, and kept up a constant fire, but taking great care, never to approach us, nearer than the range of their Shot, in this situation we continued dropping down, anxiously waiting for the Turn of the Tide, or a favorable Wind, and having proceeded about a mile and a half, all three Vessels unfortunate Grounded at the same time, and the Tide of Ebb still running very rapidly down, rendered all our Efforts to get them afloat again, useless. The Galleys instantly perceived our situation, and taking advantage of our defenceless State, advanced with all the Speed they could exert to get possession of the Vessels, at that moment there were but two Alternatives, either to fall Prisoners into the hands of the Rebels, or immediately to effect a Retreat in the Boats—the Choice was Judged not to admit of a Moments hesitation, the latter measure being effected with great difficulty, the Boats proceeded down the Creek, and Joined the Galatea in Fredericka sound.

Question. What time of Tide was it when you attempted to Tow the Hinchinbrook up to the Galleys against the Tide?

Answer. The first Quarter of the Ebb.

Question. What time of Tide was it, when the Vessels grounded?

Answer. About half Ebb.

Question. Did you inform yourself from the Master whether there was any difficulty in dropping down?

Answer. I did: and from the information I received from Captain Mowbray who commanded the Province Sloop Rebecca, that there was no difficulty, I desired him to lead down, which he did, and was the first aground.

Question. When you was a Ground, what position was the Vessels in?

Answer. The Hinchinbrook and Rebecca with their Head & Stern to the Stream, and the Watering Brig athwart the Stream.

Question. Was the Watering Brig of any Force?

Answer. Yes: She had one three and one two Pounder Question. When She was aground, was She in your Front or Rear

- Answer. In our Rear, the Tide Swadling her down
- Question Do you think if you had, had a Craft to have moved the Hinchinbrooks Guns into the Brig, would it have prevented her being destroyed?
- Answer. I think not, because the Brig when aGround, heel'd so much that the Guns could not have been worked on board her.
- Question Did you keep any lead going, while you were dropping down?
- Answer. Yes; and had from 7 fath. 'till a half Twain
- Question What were your reasons for dropping down?
- Answer To get into deeper water and a broader Channel, for had we continued in the Situation we were first in, the Vessels would in a Short time have been rendered Useless.
- Question Had you any men killed during the Attack?
- Answer No; by reason of our lying under a Marsh, the Shot never hulled us, except one, which rebounding from the Marsh, fell in the Creek, and Sunk the Longboat.
- Question Do you impute the Loss of the Hinchinbrook, to any Neglect, or Misconduct of any of Her Officers or People?
- Answer No, on the Contrary, every one doing their Duty with great Alacrity.
- Question Were the Vessels all three aground together?
- Answer Within a minute of each other
- Question Had you it in your power to Set fire to the Hinchinbrook?
- Answer I think not, without a Certainty of falling of falling into the hands of the Rebels.
- Question What means did you use to get the Vessels off, when they Grounded?
- Answer An Anchor was carried out in the Galatea's Longboat, and hove on the Cable, but without Effect, although part of her water was Started in order to Lighten her.
- M^r. James Murray
- Question Did you Command the Hinchinbrook at the time She got aground in Fredericka Creek the 19th April 1778?
- Answer. Yes, by an order from Captain Jordan of the Galatea, dated the 9th April, upon the death of Lieutenant Ellis.⁵
- Question. Relate to the Court what you know concerning the Loss of the Hinchinbrook?
- Answer. On the 18th. April 1778 about 4 ^a-Clock in the Afternoon, I perceived three Rebel Gallies coming down Fredericka Creek, I sent to acquaint Captain Jordan of their being in sight, about 5 they fired six Shot at us: We moored the Vessel athwart the Creek, in order to annoy them. About 8 Lieutenant Merrick came onboard; We then warped lower down, about midnight we brought too, and moored athwart the Creek again, and continued in that Position all Night. about 5 in the morning, the Gallies advanced and fired several Shot at us, which they continued to do until about 7. finding our Situation so very bad, they having sunk the Longboat and Shot away a deal of the Rigging, we Cut the Best Bower and Stream Cables, weighed the Small Bower, and rowed the Vessel lower down, about 8 She grounded[;] finding the Vessel aground the Rebels still advancing the Vessel stern on, we thought it prudent to quit her.

- Question. Where was the Rebecca Sloop when you grounded?
- Answer. She grounded nearly at the same time
- Question. What was your reason for moving the Brig at 8^a Clock at Night?
- Answer. By Lieutenant Merricks order.
- Question. What number of Shot, do you think the Rebels fired at you, before you moved lower down?
- Answer. Six.
- Question. Are you a Pilot for Fredericka Creek?
- Answer. No. but have sounded, and found Sufficient Water for the Brig.
- Question. Did you keep your lead going in coming down?
- Answer. Yes.
- Question. Had you Boats ahead Sounding?
- Answer. Yes, both Towing and Sounding.
- Question. When you was a ground, what means were used to get her afloat?
- Answer. We got an Anchor out, and endeavor'd to heave her off, but without Effect?
- Question. What time of tide was it?
- Answer. About $\frac{2}{3}$ Ebb, or thereabouts
- Question. Did the Rebels fire upon you while carrying the Anchor out?
- Answer. No; but advanced very fast, and on the Boats quitting the B[rig?] they then fired, both round and Grape.
- Question. What distance were the Galleys from you, when you quitted the Vessel?
- Answer. Not half a Mile.
- Question. By what accident got you aground?
- Answer. By the Watering Brig and Rebecca Sloops being aground and not Sufficient room in the Channel.
- Question. When you was aground, what was the reason you did [not] defend the Vessel from the Rebels?
- Answer. She lay Stern toward the Stream and to the Enemy, and could not get a Gun to bear, having no Stern Ports.
- Question. What was the reason you did not destroy her, to prevent her falling into the Enemies hands?
- Answer. The Enemy being so very close, and not having Boats Sufficient to carry off the people.
- Question. Did the Officers and people do their utmost in defending the Vessel?
- Answer. Yes. they did to their Utmost power, and quitted her with reluctance.
M^r John Hamilton Sworn.
- Question fm. L^t Merrick. When I went on board the Hinchinbrook at 8^a Clock in the Evening on the 18th. April, whether She was not laying near a Wood which flanked the Creek?
- Answer. No.
- Question fm. L^t Merrick. When we weighed in the morning of the 19th. did we not Attempt to Row and Tow the Vessels against the Tide in order to attack the Gallies?
- Answer. Yes. according to my Idea, every attempt was made for that purpose.
- Question. Did She go ahead or aStern?

- Answer She went astern.
- Question Did not the three Vessels ground nearly at the same time?
- Answer. They did.
- Question. Whether? when we quitted the Hinchinbrook the Gallies were not within half a Mile of us, and advancing towards us?
- Answer^d. I believe the Lee Galley was nearer than that, and the other two about the distance M^r Merrick speaks of.
- Question Whether at the time We quitted the Hinchinbrook, She was not in a Defenceless State?
- Answer I looked upon her intirely so.
- Question Whether in your opinion, if we had not immediately effected a retreat in the Boats, we should not have fell into the hands of the Enemy?
- Answer. Yes, or Killed, there was not time to be lost.
- Question fm the Court. Had you time to set her on Fire?
- Answer No.
- Question fm M^r Murray Whether before Lieutenant Merrick came on board the Hinchinbrook, She was not in a State of Defence and every Necessary means used for receiving or attacking the Enemy?
- Answer I think so, to the best of my Knowledge She was.
Dominick Hogan Sworn
- Question fm the Court. When M^r Merrick came on board the Brig, do you recollect Woods being near her?
- Answer Yes.
- Question How far distant?
- Answer Within musquet Shot.
- Question When the Enemy fired at you, did they do you any damage?
- Answer. Yes. they cut away some of our Shrouds, and great part of our Rigging, Sunk the Longboat and wounded a man in her.
- Question When you weighed in the morning what position were the Vessels in?
- Answer. Moored athwart the River, abreast of each other.
- Question What position were the Vessels in when they dropped down?
- Answer The Sloop was aStern of the Hinchinbrook, and the Brig on her Bow:
- Question What was the Cause of the Hinchinbrook's getting aground?
- Answer By reason of the Brigs being aground and the narrowness of the Channel, caused the Hinchinbrook to Ground also.
- Question Were all three Vessels aground?
- Answer. I am certain the two Brigs were aground, and I believe the Sloop also.
- Question After the Hinchinbrook was aground, was every means used to get her off?
- Answer There was, by carrying an Anchor out and Starting the Water
- Question After you got aground, and was carrying the Anchor out, did you perceive the Rebels approaching towards you?
- Answer Yes.
- Question Did you think they were so near you as to prevent your destroying her?
- Answer Yes.

- Question To the best of your Judgement, do you think every Necessary Duty was put in Execution by the Officers and Crew, for the preservation of the Hinchinbrook, or for the Burning her?
- Answer I do, as the Gallies were so near, we had not time to put that in execution
- Question Before you moved the Hinchinbrook, would your Shot have reached the Enemy's at the time they cut your Shrouds and Rigging?
- Answer No, I think not.
- Question. How many Guns had the Hinchinbrook?
- Answer. Fourteen four pounders.
- Question Were there any people left on board the Hinchinbrook when the Boats put off?
- Answer. Yes. I think five.
- Question. What was the reason of their being left behind?
- Answer. I did not see them, and we had not time to Search for them.
- Question Were the Gallies advancing upon you at the time you quitted the Brig, and how near were they?
- Answer They were rowing down very fast towards us, and fired Shot over and over us.

Question From M^r Murray Whether the Brig, before Lieutenant Merrick came on board was not in a State of defence, and every necessary Means used for receiving or Attacking the Enemy?

Answer Yes.

For the Prisoners

M^r Robert Cauzar (master of the Galatea) Sworn.

Question. Relate to the Court, what you know relative to the Loss of the Hinchinbrook?

Answer Having received Orders from Captain Jordan to Command the Watering Brig, as a Reinforcement to the Vessels on the Advanced Posts—on my Joining the Hinchinbrook I went on board in order to receive Orders from the Commanding Officer there—Lieutenant Merrick acquainted me with his intention of Boarding the Gallies early the next morning, provided a favorable opportunity offered—The Tide of Ebb running rapidly and there being no Wind to Command the Vessels, rendered it impossible to advance towards the Gallies—At the dawn of the day we perceived the Gallies advancing with their Oars, they fired a few random Shot at us, and Continued so until they Judged themselves to be within point blank Shot—We lay above an hour and a half exposed to a very Galling Fire, our Guns (only four pounders) were in Short Useless, as they would not Carry the distance—upon which We Weighed and dropt lower down, anxiously waiting the Turn of Tide, or a favorable opportunity to attack the Gallies—the Channel being very narrow and Intricate, and the Tide of Ebb still Continuing, the Vessels unfortunately grounded, nearly at the same time—the Gallies on perceiving our Situation, continued Advancing, and kept a very heavy fire—As there was not the least probability of Getting the Vessels off, notwithstanding every attempt

- was made by carrying an Anchor out &c^a. we deserted her.
- Question What time in the morning did you Weigh?
- Answer About 6 ^aClock I believe.
- Question What time of Tide was it?
- Answer About the last Quarter of the Ebb.
- Question What time of Tide was it When the Hinchinbrook grounded?
- Answer In the last Quarter of the Ebb.
- Question. Do you think your being aground in the Watering Brig Obstructed the Passage of the Hinchinbrook?
- Answer I believe it did.
- Question How near were the Gallies to the Hinchinbrook, while the people were Striving to get her off?
- Answer About half a mile distant
- Question Could any Guns from the Hinchinbrook or Rebecca have prevented the Gallies from advancing on them?
- Answer No, none could be brought to bear from the Hinchinbrook She having no Stern Ports, and She laying end on with the Stream.
- Question Was there time to destroy the Hinchinbrook, and bring the people off, to prevent her falling into the Enemies hands?
- Answer No, As the Gallies continued approaching very fast.
- Question Suppose you had Stayed to destroy the Hinchinbrook at all Events, what do you apprehend would have been the Consequences?
- Answer I am of Opinion to think, that the Boats might have been sunk by the Enemies Shot and the Crew made Prisoners.⁶

JOURNAL OF LE COMTE DE CAMBIS ON BOARD THE LANQUEDOC

Aout 1778. Dimanche 9. Au jour tems brumeux et couvert, petit vent au SSO. Le Général a envoyé ordre au *Protecteur*¹ et à la *Provence*² de profiter ce matin du jusant pour sortir du chenal de l'Ouest et se tenir en croisière en dehors de Rhode island. á sept heures une quinzaine de bateaux plats sont arrivés à bord envoyés par les Américains avec lesquels on étoit convenu que le lendemain se feroit la descente combinée de nos troupes qui devoient occuper une aile à l'armée du Général Sullivan, et il est aussi venu trois bateaux plus grands en forme de bacs et chargés de trains d'affûts d'artillerie de campagne.³ L'on a envoyé tout de suite à chaque vaisseau un ou deux de ces bateaux pour aider avec leurs chaloupes et canots à transporter sur l'isle de Cononicut toutes nos troupes, notre Général voulant aujourd'hui réunir sur cette isle tous les différens corps de marine, d'infanterie et de matelots qui les composoient, en passer la revue et les faire exercer un peu à se former dans un certain ordre. Presque toute la matinée a été employée à faire partir ces troupes et à se préparer à cette opération, et à onze heures le Général étoit au moment de s'embarquer pour se rendre aussi sur Cononicut lorsqu'il est arrivé à bord une aide de camp de M^r de la Fayette venant avertir que le Général Sullivan n'avoit point attendu le jour marqué et qu'il s'étoit empressé de profiter de l'étonnement des Anglois pour s'établir à leur place dans la partie du nord de Rhode island qu'ils avoient abandonné lorsque nous forçames l'entrée de Newport, que cependant le Général Sullivan n'y étoit encore passé qu'avec deux ou trois mille hommes sans avoir ses munitions de guerre et qu'il pourvoit être dans le cas d'avoir besoin d'un pressant secours.⁴ Aussitôt notre Général s'est décidé à l'aller joindre et il a envoyé l'ordre sur Cononicut d'en faire partir tout de suite les troupes pour les faire passer sur Rhode island, et il a nommé le Fantasque^d et le Sagittaire^e pour les aller soutenir et pour protéger la descente. à onze heures ½ on a fait signal à ces vaisseaux de se tenir prêts à appareiller. Tandis que notre Général s'occupoit à faire ses nouvelles dispositions relatives à la position du Général Sullivan, la vigie que nous avons au haut des mats a averti qu'on appercevoit dehors une Escadre de plus de 30 voiles qui s'approchoit de l'entrée du port et que le vaisseau la Provence qui étoit depuis près d'une heure sorti du chenal de l'Ouest faisoit route pour y rentrer avant des signaux dont on ne pourvoit pas bien distinguer la couleur à cause de la brume. Cet avis a obligé d'annuler aussitôt et de renvoyer à un autre tems les préparatifs de descente. à midy et demi le Général m'a envoyé sur Cononicut porter l'ordre verbal d'y rembarquer sur le champ toutes les troupes et de faire revenir tout le monde à bord, ce qui s'est exécuté très promptement à l'aide des bateaux plats, canots et chaloupes. à 3 heures un officier de la Provence qui avoit traversé par terre l'isle de Cononicut pour faire plus grande diligence est venu à bord rendre au Général le compte suivant: que la Provence étant sortie du chenal de l'ouest vers onze heures n'a pas eu plutôt dépassé le fanal qu'à travers la brume l'on a aperçu le nombre de 26 voiles dont les sentimens se sont réunis à en juger 14 vaisseaux de guerre et beaucoup de frégates;⁷ que M^r de Champorcein a mis quelque tems en travers pour en mieux juger, mais que voyant la brume s'épaissir et les batimens s'approcher leur entendant tirer du canon et leur voyant faire des signaux en pavillon dont on n'a pu distinguer qu'un hollandois au grand mâât du bâtiment le plus près, comme le vent qui varioit à l'Ouest pouvoit faire tomber la Provence sous le vent de la tour et ne pas lui permettre de gagner l'autre chenal dont plusieurs batimens de la flotte étrangère commençoient d'être proches, que M^r de Champorcein s'est décidé à faire les signaux au Protecteur à portée de qui il étoit encore et à rentrer pour se rallier à lui. D'après ce détail nous n'avons plus douté que c'étoit l'Amiral Howe qui venoit pour jeter du secours dans la place et nous attaquer, et qui certainement avoit été bien informé par ses espions, puisqu'il arrivoit précisément le lendemain de notre entrée dans le port, sans que nous eussions eu le moindre indice de sa sortie de Newyork. Le Général a donné ordre à la Provence et au Protecteur de venir nous rejoindre le plus tôt possible, et il a envoyé sur Cononicut plusieurs officiers pour reconnoître cette flotte, observer ses mouvemens et nous les signaler de dessus la tour. Le tems étoit pour lors orageux et le vent variable de l'OSO petit frais au NO avec du calme par intervalle. à 4 heures l'on a mis signal pour faire venir à bord du général les chefs de Division et tous les Capitaines commandans, afin de délibérer sur les moyens de mettre l'escadre dans le meilleur état de défense supposé que les vents qui sont presque toujours contraires pour sortir nous retiennent dans ce port et nous empêchent d'aller prévenir l'attaque des ennemis. L'on a décidé qu'il falloit tout de suite prendre le parti d'emboffer tous les vaisseaux très serrés sur une meme ligne en couvrant bien le passage entre Cononicut et Gould island et les ordres ont été donnés en conséquence à tous les Capitaines pour commencer dès ce soir et pendant la nuit à se ranger dans le meilleur ordre possible. à sept heures ceux qu'on avoit envoyé sur Cononicut étant de retour à bord ont rapporté que la flotte consistait en 12 à 13 vaisseaux à deux batteries, presque autant de frégates, et le reste batimens de transport, que plusieurs étoient encore sous voile courant des bords, mais que la plus grande partie étoit au mouillage assez au large de terre. à l'entrée de la nuit nous avons aperçu qu'il se faisoit une petite fusillade sur Rhode island environ à demi lieue au Nord du fort qui domine la ville. à dix heures du soir nous avons vu qu'il sortoit de Newport une petite goélette à deux mâts qui a fait route vers la flotte.⁸ Le tems a été toute la nuit couvert et orageux, le vent variable de l'OSO au NO par grains et avec de la pluye.

August 1778. Sunday 9. At daylight the weather foggy and overcast, little wind at the SSW. The general sent an order to the *Protecteur*¹ and the *Provence*² to profit this morning from the ebb tide to go out of the West Passage and to cruise outside Rhode Island. At seven o'clock some fifteen flat boats arrived on board, sent by the Americans with whom it was agreed that the next day the landing would be made in combination with our troops who were to occupy a wing of General Sullivan's army, and there also came three larger boats in the form of ferryboats and laden with trains of field artillery carriages.³ They immediately sent each of the ships of the line one or two of these boats in order to help with their longboats and dinghies to transport onto the island of Cononicut all our troops, our general wanting today to reunite on that island all the different corps of marines, infantry, and sailors who comprised them, to pass them in review and to exercise them a little to form them into a certain order. Almost the whole morning was employed in sending off these troops and preparing for this operation, and at eleven o'clock the general was on the point of embarking also to go to Cononicut when there arrived on board an aide de camp of M. de Lafayette coming to inform that General Sullivan had not at all waited for the day fixed and that he had hurried to profit from the astonishment of the English in order to establish himself in the place in the northern part of Rhode Island that they had abandoned when we forced the entrance of Newport, that, however, General Sullivan had passed there with only two or three thousand men without having his munitions of war and that he could be in the situation of having need of pressing help.⁴ At once our general decided to go join him and he sent the order to Cononicut to send the troops immediately to Rhode Island, and he appointed the *Fantasque*⁵ and the *Sagitairé*⁶ to go support them and to protect the landing. At eleven thirty o'clock a signal was made to these ships to hold themselves ready to weigh anchor. While our general was occupied making his new dispositions relative to the position of General Sullivan, the lookout that we had at the height of the masts announced that there had been sighted outside a squadron of more than thirty sails that was approaching the entrance of the port and that the ship of the line the Provence, which had since nearly an hour gone out of the West Passage took a route to reenter there, displaying signals whose color could not be well distinguished because of the fog. This news forced the immediate annulment and postponement to another time of the preparations for the landing. At twelve thirty the general sent me to Cononicut to bring the verbal order to re-embark there immediately all the troops and to have everyone return on board, which was executed very promptly with the help of the flatboats, dinghies, and longboats. At 3 o'clock an officer of the Provence who had crossed the island of Cononicut by land in order to make the greater diligence came on board to report to the general the following: that the Provence having gone out of the West Passage around eleven o'clock had no sooner passed the lighthouse than through the fog they had seen the number of 26 sails, of which the sentiments are united in judging to be 14 warships of the line and many frigates;⁷ M. de Champorcein had taken some time in crossing in order to judge better, but that seeing the fog thicken and the ships getting closer to them, hearing canon fire and seeing them signaling by flags of which they could distinguish only a Dutch one at the mainmast of the nearest ship, as the wind, which changed to the west could cause the Provence to fall to leeward of the tower and not allow him to gain the other channel to which several ships of the foreign fleet began to get near, that M. de Champorcein decided to signal to the Protecteur in reach of which he still was and to re-enter in order to join it. After this detail we no longer doubted that it was Admiral Howe who was coming to throw some assistance into the place and to attack us, and who certainly had been informed by his spies, since he arrived precisely the day after our entrance into the port, without our having had the least indication of his departure from New York. The general gave orders to the Provence and the Protecteur to come rejoin us as soon as possible, and he sent to Cononicut several officers to reconnoiter this fleet, to observe its movements, and to signal to us from the top of the tower. The weather was stormy and the wind variable from the WSW, a little brisk to the NW with some calms in intervals. At 4 o'clock a signal was made to summon on board the flagship the heads of division and all the captains in command, in order to deliberate on the means of putting the squadron in the best state of defense, supposing that the winds, which are almost always contrary for going out, retained us in port and prevented going out to anticipate the attack of the enemy. It was decided that it was necessary immediately to bring the vessels into close formation on the same line in covering well the passage between Cononicut and Gould Island and the orders were given in consequence to all the captains to begin the evening and during the night to range in the best order possible. At seven o'clock those who had been sent to Cononicut having returned on board reported that the fleet consisted of 12 to 13 ships of the line of two decks, almost as many frigates, and the remaining ships transports, that several were still under sail running tacks, but that the greatest part was anchored rather far from land. At nightfall we saw a small fusillade made on Rhode Island about a half league to the north of the fort that dominates the town. A ten o'clock in the evening we saw go out from Newport a small two-masted schooner that headed toward the fleet.⁸ The weather was the whole night overcast and stormy, the wind variable from the WSE to NW with squalls and rain.

[Anchorage in the Eastern Passage, R.I.]

The American general did not find that we were anchored in a manner to efficaciously protect the landing of his troops, he sent me some pilots to ask me to position myself more in advance;¹ I immediately weighed anchor and prepared to fire on a battery which I was told was on our route, we took route to the north without seeing a shot fired, I ranged as close to the battery as possible, and I found it destroyed; at length at 1:30 o'clock I anchored in the post that was indicated to me by the pilots, in 3 ½ fathoms, with a bottom of mud, I carried a point ancre in the north in order to be able should the need arise to turn broadside to the shore.

At 2 o'clock the lookouts of the frigates discovered 27 sail at sea but the distance and the fog did not allow me to reconnoiter them, a little later I interrogated an American privateer who told me he counted 33 sail, Viz.: 5 ships of the line, 7 or 8 frigates, and 18 or 20 transports;² a part of the American army landed under our fire, and without any obstacle.

Sir,

The English having yesterday evening abandoned the coast, the Americans commenced in the morning their landing without encountering any obstacle. From the moment that I was informed by M. Sullivan of his movement of the desire that he had to see me weigh anchor with the other frigates, I got under sail.¹ I am anchored with the frigates that Messrs. de St. Come² and de Bonneval³ command two miles to the north of Fogland Ferry, as it was indicated to me by the pilots that he sent me to undertake the retreat, a precaution that I hope will be unnecessary.

An American captain who has just anchored in the river has deposed to me having seen at sea twenty-seven ships, of which four or five are ships of the line, several frigates, which I judge to be enemy.⁴ I judge this news too important to neglect sending it to you by several means.

I beg you, Sir, to dictate the conduct that I should take, sending me your orders, my position being delicate. Cap^t Harmood² will acquaint Your Lordship particularly of every thing you may wish to be acquainted with.

The Toulon Fleet under the Command of the Count D'Estaing entered this Harbour Yesterday Afternoon about 4 o'Clock under a very heavy and smart Fire from the Batteries at Brenton's Point, Goat Island, and North End of the Town, which they passed and are now at an Anchor between Goat Island and Connanicut pretty close to the Shore; The Admiral is about $\frac{3}{4}$ of a Mile to the Southward of Gould Island, and the rest of the Ships consisting of Ten Sail of the Line; in a Line ahead towards the North End of Connanicut.

There are two Sail of the Line in the Naraganset Passage, and two Frigates in the Seconnet Passage.

They have been landing Men on Connanicut from the Ships all this Morning; I suppose with an Intent to throw up Batteries But are now taking them off. I have the Honor to be [&c.]

DIARY OF CAPTAIN FREDERICK MACKENZIE, BRITISH ARMY

[Extract]

[Newport, R. I.]

9th Aug^t [1778] Fine weather. Wind S.S.W.

All quiet last night, and no appearance of the Rebels this morning. The French Fleet at day break in the same position they were after coming in yesterday. Many small craft plying about in the Narraganset passage. Some small vessels in the Bay. One or two of them came down as low as Codrington's Cove; but a few shots being fired at them from Tomini hill; they went off.

The troops employed this morning in pitching their tents, and assisting, with all the Carriages that could be got, in removing provisions and Stores to the upper part of the town.

About 12 o'Clock a fleet hove in sight to the Southward; 10 Sail of large ships were first discovered. The number increased continually until half past one, when 35 sail, large and small were counted, standing directly for the harbour with a fair wind. At 1 o'Clock it became certain that the fleet in sight was that under the Command of Lord Howe from New York; and L^t Knowles, Agent of Transports, with Captain Lumm, and Captain Barry,¹ in two boats, were immediately sent off to give Lord Howe information relative to the situation of the Enemy's fleet, and the state of the Garrison; and also to know what assistance he wished to have from the Garrison, and how we could cooperate with him. The spirits of the whole Garrison were at this period elevated to the highest pitch, being convinced that if the wind continued in the same point, (and the Fleet was then advancing fast) the British fleet would enter the harbour before night, and that we should be the joyful spectators, or perhaps assist in the destruction or Capture of the French fleet.

From the first appearance of the British fleet, the French were busily employed in re-embarking the men they had landed on Connonicut. Many signals were made by The French admiral,² and his ships began to place themselves in a position to oppose the greatest possible fire upon the line of entrance to the harbour.

One of the French ships³ went out of the Naraganset last night or very early this morning, but on discovering the English Fleet, she crouded all the sail she could make and returned back into that passage.

The wind continued favorable for Lord Howe 'till towards Evening, when it died away. Appearance of a great Thunder Storm gathering in the N.W. quarter.

At 6 in the Evening the British Fleet came to, and anchored about 7 miles S.W. from the entrance of the harbour.

We are now Spectators of two powerful fleets at anchor within a few miles of us, whose operations will probably decide our fate. That of the Enemy consisting of 12 Ships of the Line and 4 Frigates, in actual possession of the harbour. The British fleet blocking up the harbour, inferior with respect to size of the ships, but so superior in Actual force and spirit, that we have no doubt Lord Howe will atchieve a glorious Victory if he can either force his way into the harbour, or induce the Enemy to fight at Sea. . . .

All our Batteries are manned by Seamen, who have tents made of Sails at all their posts. . . .⁴

GENERAL GEORGE WASHINGTON TO PRESIDENT OF CONGRESS HENRY LAURENS

Sir

White Plains [N.Y.] August 9th 1778

At 10 OClock last night the Inclosed Letter came to hand from General Sullivan with one addressed to myself, a Copy of which I do myself the honor of transmitting.¹ The Enemy seem determined that none of their ships of War shall fall into the Count D'Estaings hands.

Yesterday I received a Letter from Gen^l Maxwell dated at 9 OClock A.M. on the 7th at Elizabeth Town, containing the following paragraph.—“I have to inform your Excellency that early yesterday morning Lord Howe sailed out of the Hook with his whole fleet of Armed Vessels. They were out of sight in the afternoon and were supposed to be going for Rhode Island—No troops or Transports supposed to be with them.” His Letter also had the following Nota bene—“No British fleet arrivd yet that we can hear of.”² General Maxwell’s information respecting Lord Howe’s sailing from the Hook was stated in such pointed and positive terms, that I thought it my duty to communicate it to Count D’Estaing, and accordingly I dispatched an Express with it, in a very little time after I was advised on the subject, subjoining a copy time of this Nota bene.³ I have the Honor to be &c

G^o. Washington.

1. The letter, Maj. Gen. John Sullivan to Washington, 6 Aug., is above. The second letter referred to, presumably a letter from Sullivan to Laurens, has not been found.

2. On 4 Aug. Washington had ordered Brig. Gen. William Maxwell, a native of northern New Jersey, to “keep a vigilant watch upon the motions of the Enemy upon Staten Island, and upon their fleet in the Bay” and to inform Washington if “any considerable number are preparing for sea.” *GW Papers, Rev. MAJOR GENERAL JOHN SULLIVAN TO PRESIDENT OF CONGRESS HENRY LAURENS

Dear Sir

Portsmouth, Rhode Island Aug^t 10 1778,

I have only time to inform your Excellency & the Congress¹ that the Count De Estaing & myself had fixed upon This morning Day Break to make our Landing upon the Island preparatory to which the Fleet came through Newport Harbor on Saturday night & Silenced two of their Batteries The Enemy Supposing that we should Land in the night & cut off the Communication between the out posts & the Town Evacuated all their works on the North of the Island & Retired to Newport Early Saturday Even^g I was informed of this Early in the morning of yesterday & to prevent their Reoccupying the works I immediately threw the whole Army Across & Sent word to the Count to Land his Men & Join us.² but before the word Message could reach him & before our Army was Compleatly over a British Fleet of twenty Nine Sail appeared Standing for Newport Close in with Seconnet Point. This prevented the Count from Sending me any troops he took them all on Board & this morning went out to Engage the Fleet but on the Appearance of the French Squadron they fled I saw the Count in Chase of them ~~but~~ at Eleven of Clock This must Retard my movements Some Respects & Render our operations more tedious if nothing worse The Circumstance was Exceeding unfortunate Even if it does not Delay the Count a Day I am very fearful it may work a Delay till a British Fleet of Sufficient force may arrive to put an End to the Enterprize Congress may Rest assured that I Shall Endeavour to Surmount Every Difficulty & Effect the Design of the Enterprize with as much Expedition as possible I have the Honor to be [&c.]

MAJOR GENERAL JOHN SULLIVAN TO GENERAL GEORGE WASHINGTON

Portsmouth Rhode Island 10 Aug 1778—

Dear General

The Count De-Estaing and myself were by Agreement to land our Forc[e]s here this Morning but I having received Intelligence early Yesterday Morning that the Enemy had abandoned the north End of the Island entirely in Consequence of the French Fleets coming up the River thought it best to push over without Loss of Time the whole of my Troops which accordingly was done—Almost immediately after our landing a Fleet of 29 Sail, 8 or 10 of which appeared to be Vessells of Force were discovered standing into Newport under Eng Colour-¹ As the Wind was small & unfavourable the Count kept his Position but this Morning he got under Way with a fine Breeze, passed the Batteries at Newport and those which are below with all his Ships of the Line & went in Chace of the English Fleet—At 11 oClock I had the Pleasure of seeing them fly before him—

The Count has left three Frigates² in the East Passage—It is out of my Power to inform You when we shall make the Attack on the Enemy as it is uncertain when the French Fleet will return and I think it necessary to wait their Arrival as their Troops are onbard—I have the Honor to be [&c.]

MAJOR GENERAL JOHN SULLIVAN TO VICE-AMIRAL COMTE D'ESTAING

Dear Sir

Nothing could give more pain than to hear by Col^o Fleury¹ that your Excellency was displeas'd at our Landing the Troops on Rhode Island before the day prefix'd, I couldn't possibly have been ready if there was this appearance of an oposition on the part of the Enemy before the day agreed on, if then but some Inhabitants and Deserters from the Island informed General Green² yesterday morning at day Break that the Enemy had abandoned this part of the Island and retired within their works at Newport upon which he sent a small party to Examine the ground and Regiment to Support them. Upon their notifying us that the report was true, we thought it Essential to throw over troops to take possession of their works least they should suddenly return & reoccupy them. Immediately upon the determination, I detach'd Col^o Fleury to your Exc^e to inform you of our determination and to direct troops to Land in front of our right. I had not the most distant Intention of marching on towards the Enemy or risking an Action with them without the assistance of you & your Troops, but the possessing the works on the North End of the Island appeared of Such importance that we thought not a moment should be Lost; when therefore your Excellency is acquainted with the principles upon which we acted, I flatter my self you will approve the measures. The arrival of the British fleet was as unexpected as miraculous and Surprising. It seems at present to interfere with all our plans, as the Troops in that fleet when Landed will encrease the Enemy's numbers, perhaps four thousand men and will deprive your Excellency of an opportunity of assisting us with four thousand of your own good Troops, the difference in action must be at least eight thousand against us. under the Circumstances I Sollicit your Excellency as my brave & worthy Colleague, in support of the common cause, to give me your advise respecting what ought to be done under the present circumstances & to give me Intelligence respecting the British fleet which Lays off the harbour and of the measure you mean to pursue respecting them. you need give your Self no uneasiness about the three frigates in the East Channel,³ as I can practically secure them from any attempts of the Enemy, as to the part of the fleet with you, if found inferior to the British Squadron I can Easily upon being notified point out a place where it can be conducted to Lay in Security under cover of batteries which I can Immediately erect for the purpose and which with the assistance of your own fire, will be Sufficient against every attempts, Even of the whole British Navy. I am anxious to Know your Excellency's determination & also to receive your best advice upon the measures we are to adopt. I have the honor to be [&c.]

DIARY OF CAPTAIN FREDERICK MACKENZIE, BRITISH ARMY

[Extract]

[Newport, Rhode Island]

10th Aug^t [1778] At day break the British fleet discovered at anchor nearly in the same position as yesterday Evening.

Thick weather. Wind N.W, and appearance of rain.

Several movements observed in the French fleet. D'Estaing¹ appears to be making a disposition to receive Lord Howe, in case the wind should admit of his coming in; and is endeavouring to place his ships in such a manner as to bring the greatest fire possible upon the line of Entrance, which the Channel he is in will permit.

Many large flat boats and launches are passing between Connonicut and the French fleet, & bringing off men.

Captains Lumm and Barry² returned early this morning from on board Lord Howe's ship, and inform us that the force under his Command is, 8 Sail of the line, (74 & 64), 4 ships of 50 Guns, 2 of 44, 6 Frigates, 3 fire ships, 2 Bombs, and 4 Gallies.³ The whole remarkably well manned, in the highest spirits, and most anxiously wishing for an opportunity to Signalize themselves in the service of their Country against its ancient and perfidious Enemy. The 23rd Regiment, or Royal Welch Fusiliers, is on board The fleet, having voluntarily offered to serve on board on this Occasion as Marines.⁴

Lord Howe told Captain Lumm he was determined to engage the Enemy; from which we may conclude he is confident of success; otherwise he would not risk an Action in which a defeat would be attended with the most fatal consequences.

The French fleet appears to be composed of two ships of 90 Guns, 9 of 74, and 1 of 50.⁵

About 8 o'Clock the wind shifted round more to the Northward, and a Signal was made by the French Admiral to cut or slip; soon after which some of the Ships were under way. The wind moderate at N.E. We at first imagined their intention was to bring up against our batteries; but we soon found they were determined to go out to engage the British fleet. As soon as Lord Howe perceived they were in motion, he weighed, and the British fleet lay to. The French fleet having all got in motion, a Ship of 74 Guns led out, and was followed by D'Estaing, and 9 other ships in a line ahead; — (The other ship went out by the Narraganset passage). Our Batteries being all prepared and well manned, the action commenced about half past 8, by a shot from the North Battery at the headmost ship. As the ships advanced, the fire became more general from all our batteries; but as the Enemy had no intention of bringing up against them, they kept as near as they could to the Connonicut shore, so that our Guns could not do the desired execution on them: — however, many of our shot struck them, especially from Brenton's point battery, which being nearest to them did great service, altho' the effect could not be perceived.

The French ships kept up a prodigious fire as they passed our batteries. I am certain they did not fire less than 2,500 Cannon shot, but it was done with so little judgement or effect, that not a drop of blood was drawn on our side nor a Gun damaged. Many of their shot fell into the town, and one ship elevated her guns so high as to throw shot of 48 l^{bs} 200 yards beyond the Library⁶ which is situated on the highest ground above the center of the town. Some of the French ships fire in a very irregular and hasty manner, 14 or 15 Guns almost at the same instant, so that their shot fell wide of the object: Others were more regular, beginning forward, and firing progressively aft.

The fire from our Batteries was kept up with great spirit, perseverance, and judgement, until the whole of the Enemy's fleet had got out. The Cannonade continued for very near an hour and a quarter. As soon as the ships had passed our batteries, they crouded all the sail they could set, even to Studding Sails and Royals, and stood directly for the British Fleet. As soon as Lord Howe saw them coming out, he made sail, and stood away, S.S.E, but not with a pressed sail, few of his ships having more than their topsails, and Fore sail set. His reasons for thus retiring before the French fleet are not known to us, but from a knowledge of his abilities and approved spirit, every person is convinced he is acting the part of an experienced and able Seaman. Lord Howe's knowledge of his own force, and that of the Enemy, together with that of the advantages and disadvantages of Winds, Tides, Currents, and the adjacent Coasts, is so perfect, that we, who are not competent Judges of these matters, must by no means pretend to censure any part of his conduct.⁷

'Tis evident that it would be high imprudent to engage with such powerful ships without the advantage of the Wind, particularly when a great part of his dependence is on his fire ships. I believe there never was a Naval engagement on which so much depended, so that which is now likely to take place.

The whole Army were anxious Spectators of the motions of both fleets, and of the Cannonade, which formed a very interesting scene. We were in constant expectation, during the time the French ships were going past our Batteries, of seeing a Mast or Yard shot away, or some material damage happen to them, which would have been of great advantage, but they did not appear to have received any injury.

It must be acknowledged that the French Admiral acted in a spirited manner, for notwithstanding the British Fleet off the harbour appeared to be much more numerous and powerful than his own, he with great expedition made use of the first favorable wind that offered, and put to Sea, under the fire of our Batteries, in order to bring them to Action. Had one of his ships been damaged so as to prevent her from going to Sea, it is probable we might have destroyed her, and Lord Howe's superiority would have been decided.

The French Frigates and the Armed Brig remained in the Seconnet passage.⁸

The Fleets were out of sight about Sunset, standing S.S.W. the French having previously crouded sail, and appeared to have gained upon the British. . . .

The Seamen in the different Redoubts & Batteries in the front line having thrown away a great deal of Ammunition unnecessarily during these two days, in firing at almost every person who appeared on the opposite heights, the General gave an order this day that they should not fire until a body of men appeared in arms, or the Enemy were discovered breaking ground. . . .

JOURNAL OF LE COMTE DE CAMBIS ON BOARD THE LANGUEDOC

Aout 1778. Lundi 10. Au jour le tems étoit couvert et le vent à l'ONO petit presque calme. nous avons vu que plusieurs vaisseaux étoient encore occupés à se touer pour se ranger à leur poste, que le *Fantasque*¹ et le *Sagittaire*² avoient mis sous voile pour se rapprocher plus promptement, que la *Provence*³ étoit sous voile quittant le chenal de l'Ouest et venant par le nord de Cononicut se rallier à l'Escadre, et que le *Protecteur*⁴ travailloit aussi à appareiller pour ne pas rester seul. á 7 heures le tems continuant d'etre orageux le vent a varié tout d'un coup dans la partie du NNE, et le Général s'est décidé aussitôt à en profiter pour aller chercher les ennemis quoique très incertain s'ils n'avoient pas une quantité de batiments supérieure aux notres. L'on a fait signal à 7 heures ½ de se préparer à appareiller et nous nous sommes disposé au branlebas général. L'on a renvoyé les bateaux plats fournis par les Américains avec l'aide de camp venu hier que le Général a chargé de dire à M^r Sullivan qu'il reviendrait l'aider à terminer le siège de Newport.⁵ Nous n'avons point embarqué nos batimens à rames pour ne pas perdre du tems et à cause de l'incertitude où l'on étoit si ce commencement de vent ne nous abandonneroit pas avant que toute l'Escadre peut être hors de la baye. à 8 heures l'on a fait signal que l'escadre se formeroit dans l'ordre de combat naturel, le général au centre du corps de bataille, et à 8 heures $\frac{1}{2}$ l'on a mis signal d'appareiller en coupant les cables. Le *Zélé*⁶ formant la tete de la ligne a été le premier à la voile et a fait route sur les deux huniers et tous les forts et batteries des Anglois n'ont pas tardé de lui tirer. Le *Tonnant*⁷ a appareillé ensuite forçant de voiles pour tenir la ligne serrée et suivi de la Provence, du Vaillant,⁸ du *Marseillois*⁹ et de nous qui avons coupé le cable à 9 heures $\frac{1}{2}$ en mettant sous voile. Le reste de l'Escadre a fait de meme et nous avons ainsi défilés l'un après l'autre sous le feu de toutes les batteries et forts des Anglois qui étoit plus considérable et bien mieux servi qu'il n'avoit été l'avant-veille. Nous avons cessé de tirer à dix heures $\frac{1}{2}$ ayant dépassé la batterie de la pointe Brenton qui est la dernière, et la queue de l'Escadre a cessé de tirer vers onze heures. Nous avons alors aperçu le Protecteur qui étoit sous voile sortant du chenal de l'ouest. Un moment après, étant tout à fait en dehors de Rhode island, nous avons vu que la flotte angloise venoit d'appareiller et qu'elle prenoit la fuite en forçant de voiles. Nous leur avons donné chasse en mettant toutes voiles dehors sans nous donner le temps d'embarquer nos batimens à rames et nous avons vu avec satisfaction que tous nos douze vaisseaux étoient sortis sans qu'il parut qu'aucun eut été incommodé ni le moindrement désemparé par le feu des batteries. En particulier nous n'avions eu seulement que la vergue de misaine percée d'un boulet, et pas un seul homme touché, quoique plusieurs autres boulets eussent donné dans le corps du vaisseau. Nous avons passé à travers quantité de bouées des cables que les ennemies avoient coupé et nous avons vu en meme temps plusieurs de leurs canots et chaloupes avec d'autres boisages qui passaient contre le bord, dont ils s'étoient débarrassés pour n'être pas retardés dans leur fuite. à une heure nous nous sommes aperçus que nous avions de l'avantage de marche sur la flotte ennemie qui faisoit porter vent arrière au SSO, et nous avons compté qu'ils étoient au nombre de 36 voiles dont il y en avoit 9 à 10 plus petits qui devoient être un convoi et qui paroissent porter un peu plus Ouest à dessein de se séparer. Dans la crainte que ceux-ci ne s'échappassent nous avons fait porter à 2 heures pour les rapprocher, mais demie heure après nous avons remis la route en droiture sur le gros des vaisseaux parce qu'ils faisoient courir plus au Sud et qu'ils nous gagnoient de marche par le vent plus frais qu'ils avoient en se tenant plus au large. à 6 heures de soir l'on a relevé la pointe la plus Est de l'isle de Block au NNO 5° N et la pointe la plus Ouest au NO $\frac{1}{4}$ N distant 5 lieues. Nous avons eu toute l'après midi le vent au NE petit frais par rafalles, et nous avons chassé sans observer d'ordre de manière que le Zélé s'est toujours trouvé le plus proche des ennemis qu'il serroit de près et nous ensuite ; mais au coucher du soleil nous avons été obligés de renvoyer au lendemain l'espérance de les joindre à cause que plusieurs de nos vaisseaux restoient à plus d'une lieue et demie de notre arrière. en conséquence l'on a fait signal au Zélé de diminuer de voiles ce que nous avons aussi exécuté pour embarquer tous nos batimens à rames. L'horison s'est alors un peu embrumé et le vent a fraichi en variant du NE à l'Est. toute l'escadre a été ralliée à l'entrée de la nuit, et s'est rangée dans la ligne de bataille les amures à stribord pour continuer la poursuite des ennemis dans cet ordre. Comme nous n'avions aucune de nos frégattes et autre bâtimens légers qui tous étoient restés dans le chenal de l'Est, parcequ'on n'avoit pas pu ni eu le tems de leur envoyer des ordres pour sortir,¹⁰ le Général a fait héler à 8 heures du soir un bateau corsaire américain qui nous suivoit depuis ce matin et il l'a chargé de s'aller placer pour la nuit en tete de l'Escadre de l'avant du Zélé afin d'observer et suivre exactement la route que feroit la flotte angloise, et nous l'indiquer en portant un feu et en tirant des fusées dont on lui a remis un paquet pour tirer s'il appercevoit qu'elle changeât de route. Nous avons donc suivi toute la nuit le feu de ce corsaire en tenant le plus près les amures à babord sous la misaine et les hunniers, le tems ayant été couvert avec petite pluye par intervalles et le vent variable de l'ENE à l'Est petit frais.

[Translation]

August 1778. Monday 10. At daylight the weather was overcast and the wind at the WNW, light, nearly calm. We saw that several ships of the line were still occupied with warping to place themselves in their post, that the *Fantasque*¹ and the *Sagitaire*² had gotten under sail to arrive more promptly, that the *Provence*³ was under sail leaving the West Passage and coming by the north of Cononicut to join the squadron, and that the *Protecteur*⁴ worked also to weigh anchor in order not to remain alone. At 7 o'clock the weather continuing to be stormy, the wind had changed all at once to come from the direction of NNE, and the general decided immediately to profit from it to go in search of the enemy, although very uncertain if the enemy did not have a number of ships superior to ours. A signal was made at 7:30 o'clock to prepare to set sail and we cleared for action. The flatboats furnished by the Americans were sent back with the aide de camp who had come yesterday, whom the general instructed to tell M. Sullivan that he would return to help him end the siege of Newport.⁵ We had not taken in our rowboats in order not to waste time and because of the uncertainty in which we were whether this beginning of wind would abandon us before the entire squadron could be outside the bay. At 8 o'clock a signal was made for the squadron to form in natural order of battle, the flagship in the center of the battle formation, and at 8:30 o'clock the signal was made to set sail in cutting the cables. The *Zélé*⁶ forming the head of the line was the first under sail and proceeded under two topsails and all the forts and batteries of the English were not late in firing at it. The *Tonnant*⁷ set sail next, forcing sail in order to stay in close formation and there followed the Provence, the Vaillant,⁸ the *Marseillois*⁹ and we, who cut the cable at 9:30 o'clock in getting under sail. The rest of the squadron did the same and we filed out one after the other under the fire of all the batteries and forts of the English, which was more considerable and better served than it had been the day before yesterday. We stopped firing at ten-thirty o'clock, having passed beyond the battery at Brenton Point, which is the last, and the tail of the squadron stopped firing around eleven o'clock. We then saw the Protecteur, which was under sail, going out of the West Passage. A moment later, being entirely outside Rhode Island, we saw that the English fleet came to sail and that it took to flight forcing sails. We gave them chase under all sails without taking time to take in our rowboats and we saw with satisfaction that all our twelve ships of the line had gotten out without it appearing that any had been incommoded or in the least injured by the fire of the batteries. In particular, we had only the yard of the foresail pierced by a ball, and not a single man touched, although several other balls had entered the body of the ship. We passed by a quantity of cable buoys that the enemy had cut and we saw at the same time several of their dinghies and longboats with other timbering that passed against the side of the ship of which they had disencumbered themselves in order not to be retarded in their flight. At one o'clock we perceived that we had the advantage in sailing over the enemy fleet, which sailed with the wind astern to the SSW, and we counted that they numbered 36 sail, of which there were 9 to 10 smaller, which must be a convoy and which appeared to bear a little more to the west with a design to separate themselves. Fearing that they might escape, we bore at 2 o'clock in order to approach them, but half an hour later we returned to the route directly toward the chief part of the ships of the line because they were running more to the south and were gaining speed on us by the brisker wind that they had by sailing larger. At 6 o'clock in the evening, we took bearings of the point the farthest east of Block Island to the NNW 5° N and the point the farthest west to the NW¼N, distant 5 leagues. We had all afternoon the wind at the NE, a little brisk with squalls, and we chased without observing the order of manner that the Zélé was always the nearest to the enemy that it would be close and we next; but at sunset we were obliged to put off to the next day the hope of closing with them because several of our ships lay more than a league and a half to our rear. In consequence a signal was made to the Zélé to lessen sail, which we also executed in order to take in our rowboats. The horizon was then a little hazy and the wind had freshened in changing from the NE to the east. The entire squadron had joined at nightfall and ranged in line of battle, on the starboard tack in order to continue the pursuit of the enemy in that order. As we had none of our frigates and other light ships, all of which remained in the East Passage because we had not been able nor had the time to send them orders to go out,¹⁰ the general hailed at 8 o'clock in the evening an American privateer boat that had followed us since this morning and he instructed it to place itself for the night at the head of the squadron, in front of the Zélé, in order to observe and follow exactly the route that the English fleet took, and to indicate to us by carrying a light and in firing muskets of which he was given a bundle to fire if he perceived that it changed course. We thus followed all night the light of this privateer while keeping on the closest larboard tack under foresail and topsails, the weather being overcast with light rain at intervals and the wind variable from the ENE to the east, a little brisk.

Lundi 10.

Dans la matinée j'ai eu le vent au SE. Assés foible beaucoup de brume, J'envoyai M. le Ch^{er} De Plevinel¹ pour Sonder le chenal en remontant dans le nord, et ensuite pour reconnaître Si les batteries que les Americains nous avaient dit être forte pour nous proteger, etaient en aussi bon Etat, qu'ils le disaient, Cet officier remplit le premier objet en Sondant de demi Cable en demi Cable, jusqu'à demie lieue au N. de Rode-island et trouvai que non seulement les frégattes, mais encore les plus gros Vaisseaux pouvaient remonter jusqu'à la providence, M. De Pluvinel avait monté près a terre au port de Bristol ou les Americains embarquerent leur train d'artillerie des bateaux plats, il alla de la reconnaître L'endroit a devraient être les batteries, mais a son grand etonnement il ne vit que quelques mauvaises redoutes et pas un Seul Canon.²

quelque temps après nous entendames des bordées continuelles de Coups de Canons nous fuirent fort en Suspens, nous ne pouvions pas Croire qu'elles partissent de notre Escadre qu'on [a croiré ?] de vif au mouillage ce feu dura avec la même vivacité jusqu'à 10 h.² a Midy M De la fayette envoya un de ses aides de Camps a mon bord pour m'instruire de la brillante Sortie de notre Escadre qui avait écrasé les batteries et la fort et donnait chasse à L'Escadre Anglaise qui desqu'elle eut entendre les coups de Canon coupa ses cables et S'enfuit a toutes Voiles.⁴ pendant la nuit le vent a varié du No à L'E. assés frais et beaucoup de brume

[August 1778.] [Anchorage in the Eastern Passage, R.I.]

Monday 10.

In the morning I had the wind to the SE, rather weak, much fog, I sent M. the Chavalier De Pluvinel¹ to sound the channel in going up into the north, and then to reconnoiter if the batteries that the Americans had told us were strong to protect us were in as good a state as they said; this officer fulfilled the first object in sounding, half cable by half cable, up to half a league to the North of Rhode Island and found that not only the frigates, but even the largest ships of the line could go up as far as Providence. M. De Pluvinel went up near land at the port of Bristol where the Americans embarked their artillery train on flatboats, he went from there to the place the batteries were supposed to be, but to his great astonishment he saw only a few bad redoubts and not a single cannon.²

Sometime afterward we heard continual firing of broadsides, we were greatly in suspense, we could not believe that they were from our squadron, which had believed was at the anchorage; this firing lasted with the same vivacity until 10 o'clock.³ At noon M. de La Fayette sent one of his aides de camp on board me to inform me of the brilliant sortie of our squadron, which had smashed the batteries and the fort and gave chase to the English squadron, which on hearing the cannon fire cut its cables and fled with all sails set.⁴ During the night the wind varied from NW to E, rather brisk and much fog

Sir,

Two aides-de-camp who have come from you propose that I have two frigates go out to cruise before Newport to try to intercept whatever may enter or leave. Permit me, Sir, to make some observations to you that present themselves to the eyes of a naval officer. The written orders of M. the Count d'Estaing enjoin me to remain on station in the river in order to both favor and protect your operations. You have seen, Sir, that I have not dared to hazard going to join my squadron, which has been my first desire, in the fear that my general would disapprove my abandoning a post that he had assigned me, especially having asked to send new orders to me. Despite this consideration, I would be ready to acquiesce to your wishes if, after the reflections that I am going to make to you, you persist in believing the thing useful or necessary. In having the two frigates go out, it is necessary for them to be in a position to guard the two entrances to Newport that they anchor during night across from these entrances; otherwise they would be obliged to remain in the offing for the security of the navigation. In the first case, the small vessels going out may be chased along the coast without their being able to be prevented. If they were to remain under sail, they would be in poor position to observe what happened during the night near the land. It may be true that during the day they could run down everything that may go out. But I should observe to you that if I needed help against the English at that place that would be by the means of the frigates, which could cut the communication with what remained in the river. Besides, I have reason to hope that the French squadron tonight will join that of the enemy. As it would be impossible to go out tonight given the little wind and contrary tide, I should have time to receive news from you, which I beg you to give me in writing. As to the frigate that you desire to go up the river, as soon as I know the exact place, I will give orders to send it there. I am [&c.]

Monday 10

With the decks cleared for action, we expected at daylight to see the English squadron¹ enter to engage us our position was not pretty, all the more in that they could establish batteries on Coneticut Island to fire on our squadron² at daybreak the English squadron was still at its moorings we had had some heat throughout the night, a small wind arose from the NNE and this even started to change the General³ had the signal made for the squadron to prepare to weigh several ships raised their anchors to bring broadside on the wind increasing from the NNE as soon as we saw that it passed to the west of the pass, at 7 o'clock the General had the signal made for the whole squadron to set sails, by cutting the cable, one after another without observing the order of march other than that of defiling into the line this was executed instantly, with all sail possible we came under the triple fire of the land Batteries which we had not endured on entering although we were in the center on going out the enemy had erected in 36 hours several batteries as soon as the English squadron heard the cannonade on one part and the other it weighed anchor, fleeing with all sails set at 9 o'clock, being outside the passage and the *Protecteur*⁴ going out at the same instant from that of the west, the ships collected together the General had the signal made to chase with all sail we had all our boats in the sea The wind was weak, to make three to 4 knots or more we were at least three leagues from the English squadron, which fled before the wind with all sails set at 11 o'clock the General had the signal made to embark the boats the wind even having diminished a little the squadron fled without order but on the same route we gained on it only a little

at three o'clock in the afternoon the wind freshened we continued the chase at sunset the Enemy's rear ships lay about a league and a half from us the island of Blue Island⁵ lay to NNW 5 degrees north of us, our frigates had remained in the Eastern Passage:⁶ not being placed to give them orders to go out—an American privateer sailing with the squadron, the General had it come aboard and gave him signal lanterns for him to sail ahead of our squadron and use lights to mark the route of the enemy the General's intention was not to attack them in the night or to come too close to them fresh gales through the night, the sky covered at times

JOURNAL OF CAPTAIN HENRY DUNCAN, R.N.

10th [August].—At half-past 8 a.m. the wind shifted in a squall and came to the northward. The French fleet immediately cut their cables and came to sea. We got under way and stood to the southward under an easy sail, in order to form. The French fleet were so long of coming near us, as the wind shifted in a squall; and the time of day drawing on when it was usual to have the wind from the sea—these reasons, I suppose, induced the admiral to continue standing off from the French fleet, in hopes of a change of wind, when he could have made use of the fire ships. In the evening the French fleet were five or six miles astern of us. Sent the Apollo between them and us, to keep sight of them and to make signals to us.¹

GENERAL GEORGE WASHINGTON TO MAJOR GENERAL JOHN SULLIVAN

Head Quarters White
 Plains Aug. 10th 1778

I have been duly favoured with yours of the 6th.¹

I regret much the tardiness of the militia, as every moment is infinitely precious, and the delay, it produces, may not only frustrate the expedition, which is a matter of the greatest importance in itself, but may expose the French fleet to some fatal disaster.— I have no doubt of your utmost exertions to forward the business with all dispatch—

I have received advice from Long Island, that a party of the enemy, from twelve to fifteen hundred men were marching under General Tryon² towards the East End of the Island, collecting all the waggons they can find, in their way. They were at Setacket³ the 6th and were to continue their march early the next morning.— I have had information of another party more considerable being at Jamaica plains; but this fact is not so well ascertained as the former. I conclude the design of these parties is to sweep the Island of all the stock and grain upon it, particularly the cattle collected upon the neck at the East end;— which will be an immense acquisition to them in their present circumstances—

While the navigation of the sound is open to the enemy, it would be too perilous an attempt to throw a body of troops from this army upon the Island, notwithstanding it is a very desirable object to intercept the enemy and disappoint their intended forage. Could the Count⁴ with propriety have sent a ship or two down the sound, agreeable to a proposal made him through Col: Laurens,⁵ the enterprise might have been effected without difficulty & I had resolved upon sending a party to drive off the cattle on the neck—at the same time, I am fully sensible of the weight of the reasons which prevented his doing it.⁶

It has occurred to me that there is a possibility it may be in your power ~~if your operations are successful~~ to throw a part of the troops under your command upon the Island for the purpose here mentioned though from your last accounts, it is to be apprehended the expedition against Rhode Island will not be completed in time to admit of a measure of this kind—If it should be, this will be an object well worth your attention. If A sufficient body of troops, under the protection of some ships of war thrown across so as to take post just within the neck, might cut off the enemy's detachment without great risk [and] collect all the cattle there for our own use.

—A stroke of this kind would be attended with several obvious advantages; besides [the] loss of their troops to the enemy, the disappointment in supplies of which they stand in great need, will be severely felt; and we should gain a quantity of good cattle, which would afford extensive refreshment to the French fleet.

How far it may be convenient to the Count to assist in an operation of [this] kind I cannot perfectly judge—I know he will want to repose and refresh his men, and repair the injuries which a fleet necessarily suffers from being a long time at Sea.— If circumstances make the project, I have suggested, in other respects practicable, which I very much question, you will consult the Count; but it is not my wish he should be in any instance pressed to engage in a thing to which he discovers the least reluctance. I am [&c]

Marine Committee Phila^a: August 10th 1778

It is the desire of the Marine Committee that you will lay before them to morrow morning at Congress a written account how far you have executed their orders respecting furnishing the French Fleet under the Count D Estaing with Provisions &c; and what measures are pursuing for carrying them into full execution.¹ I am Sir [&c.]

JAMES LOVELL TO WILLIAM WHIPPLE

[Extract]

Dear Sir

[Philadelphia] August 10th 1778.¹

Your favor of July 24th is now before me²

Our letters from the Count d’Estaing and General Sullivan are quite encouraging; but a report prevails that Lord Howe being reinforced is in pursuit of the French Squadron. I hope however that the latter³ will be well in the harbor of Newport before the former reaches the Island. I do not wish to have any engagement without a considerable superiority on the side of our Allies.

The encouragement which is given by the Count d’Estaing to Privateers, I should think was sufficient to make them ply in the track of his fleet. You did not appear, (to ²know) (by ¹your letter)⁴ what he had declared—which is, that prizes taken in sight of his squadron shall belong entirely to the captors.⁵ I am quite chagrined that we have not a force of ships ready to join the Count immediately—4 or 5 days are of immense importance, may the fate of Rhode Island may depend upon 24 hour’s preparation on our part. The French fleet begins to grow sickly, to want the refreshment of an encampment for a few weeks—I notice your remarks upon the Navy Board but you know times and seasons are to be matched here and I do not find that your ideas would thrive at the period, if I was to strive to cultivate them. I will not miss any right occasion I assure you. Mr D has had no formal conversation with C—ss⁶ but I expect something of the kind soon—but it is a difficult matter to communicate any thing to you on that head without being minute and exposing myself to disagreeable chances of the fate of my letters. The French have not a proper naval force in the West Indies to enable the General of Martinique⁷ to begin operations in that quarter agreeable to instructions sent to him from Europe. I suppose you would choose to reduce Halifax before you undertake the English West India Islands. Good night Dear Sir

ROBERT T. HOOE TO GOVERNOR THOMAS JOHNSON, JR., OF MARYLAND

S^rAlex^a. [Va.] August 10th. 1778

I am under the necessity of troubling your Excellency, in Consequence of two Letters this day received, the one from M^r David Stewart; the other Cap^t A Vanbibber of Baltimore,¹ both relateing to your orders to Capt Deshon,² to hold the Sloop Molly still as the Property of the State of Maryland, notwithstanding M^r Harrisons sale to M^r Bingham. By this Vessell I had a letter from M^r Harrison wherein he says "to my great relief, & Joy of my Creditors, the Molly is at length arrived here with a tolerable Cargo, which, together with the vessell, I have sold for upwards of 60^m Livra." _ Why these Gent^l have applied to me, I cannot tell, unless they suppose me interested in the Transaction, which is not the case, nor did I know one word more of it than is related above, 'till I Perused their letters and examined the Cap^t, who also seems to call upon me as a party concern'd. What M^r Vanbibber writes does not give me any Tolerable knowledge of the matter in dispute, or enable me to Judge of the Propriety of M^r Harrisons Conduct. As to M^r Stewarts Letter, it seems Principally intended to shew that a heavy Loss will be sustain'd if the Vessell is not Permitted to proceed back on her Voyage, and that damages must be made good to M^r Bingham & M^r Sargenton,³ by M^r Harrison, or the State, if he is not Permitted to load her out again on their Acc^t And at the same time requesting me to wait on the Governor & Council to represent the Matter, and endeavour to get the Vessell released. I have wrote both the Gent^l that I am by no means Interested in this Business, nor had I been advised Circumstantially of it, by M^r Harrison, or I would readily have wait on the Governor & Council, for the Satisfaction & good of all Concern'd. I have, however, in Order to get as Good a Knowledge as I could of the worth of the Vessell, called upon Cap^t Robert Conway, to know her true State as she lay in Wachaprague, and he has given it to me, as ☉ Copy under this Cover.⁴ I have also Conversed with Cap^t Deshon on the same subject, and it really appears from both, that this Vessell would require a heavy outfit in the West Indias. I desired Cap^t Deshon to make a Mem^o. Of the Articles Supplied there by M^r Bingham, which as well as his Memory would serve, are noted in the same Paper of Cap^t Conway a Copy of which I also enclose,⁵ but great Numbers of things I know may have escaped his Memory, or the Molly came away with less expence than any Vessell of ours ever did. M^r Vanbibber writes me M^r Harrison sold her for 1300£ Martinique Currency, whether it be so or not, or how he came by it, I cannot tell, but Cap^t Deshon informs me he understood M^r Harrison had been offer'd that sum, but does not know Precisely what the Actual sale to M^r Bingham was. At this Conversation Cap^t Conway was Present, both he & Deshon seems to be well agreed that she was not given away, and from the above Circumstances and fact as related by him of this Vessell, I am of opinion she was well sold, if 1300£ is the Price. As to the legality of the Sale, or Propriety of M^r Harrisons Conduct, I do not Presume to determine on either. From a Copy of your instructions to him, which the Cap^t has shown me, I am of opinion he ought not to have sold her, if he could by any means avoid the Measure; but from what I have heretofore known of his Situation, and from my certain knowledge of his Integrity, I do think he was forced to it, and that Considering it in every light the Transaction has turned out for the Good of the State. I do most solemnly believe, from what I have heard, the Vessell would have been Laid hold of by some of the Creditors, if the Sale had not taken Place, but by his selling her, the Honor of the State has not been Publickly exposed. Besides, the State Paid as much Money in Martinique, by his selling the Vessell, as perhaps would have required the expenditure of 6 or 7000£ in Maryland, to produce it in that Island, without estimateing even a risk. And, if it is true that great Part of her Cargo would have been required for her outfit, and I believe it is the Creditors would certainly have objected to that appropriation, and in that case he could not have Proceeded, admitting no seizure was to happen. Another Circumstance, situated as he was, must have given him Good reason to believe he was taking steps that would be approved of by the Governor and Council; It is this, the Cap^t tells me in a Consultation between them, M^r Harrison asked him what was best to be done, he advised the selling, if a Thousand Pounds could be had, he thought the Vessell, considering what she must be supplied with before he could Proceed to sea, worth no more, and as he remember'd to have heard M^r Carroll propose in Council to sell the Vessell, which he thought are agreed to.⁶ As I before said, I again repeat, that I am in no shape Interested in this affair, but being called upon in the manner I have mentioned, being a Wellwisher to the Honor, Dignity & Success of the state of Maryland, and a relation of, & having a friendship for M^r Harrison, I have taken the Liberty to trouble your Excellency so far, and still must beg your Patience a little farther. I cannot doubt of the Governor & Council hearing with deliberation & Coolness and afterwards deciding Justly. If the representations of Cap^{ts} Conway and Deshon be true, the Molly could not be worth much on in the West Indias, unless she was fitted out at an enormous expence and if it be true that M^r Harrison has been a Prisoner for many Months, at discretion of his Creditors in Martinique, on Acc^t of the state of Maryland, it must be granted that, that Vessell could not be sent to sea on acc^t of the state; in the first place for want of Money, and in the next, the Agent having no longer Credit. If it be true that he has sold her for 1300£ in Martinique, and that her Condition was such as above related, it must be granted that M^r Harrison has render'd the state an essential Service, not only by getting a great Price for an old expensive Vessell, but also by Preventing the Credit and Honor of the State being exposed by a Publick Seizure, in consequence of his making a Private Sale. If it is true that Cap^t Deshon gave it as his opinion, when M^r Harrison consulted him what was best to be done with the Vessell, that a Sale, if a Thousand Pounds could be obtain'd, would be better than sending her out again on Acc^t of the State, even if he was suffered to do it; and that he verily believed the Governor and Council intended to give, but omitted such orders, it must be granted that M^r Harrison had good reason to suppose that, by selling the Vessell he was serving the State, directly agreeable to the Intentions of the Governor and Council, tho acting not by, nor Positively against their orders, but under necessity, and by advice. If I could suppose that M^r Harrison was Govern'd in the Sale of this Vessell by a dishonourable Combination, fraudulent intent, or intentional disrespect to Government, I could not appear in his behalf. But as I know necessity has forced him to the Measure, and amidst his Misfortunes and difficulties, it Clearly appears he has kept the Publick good in View, I must beg and intreat the Governor, and Council, to hear his complaints & consider the load of Difficulties he has had, & is still Labouring under, on the Publick acct; And that they will Contribute all in their Power to his relief, not only by letting the Molly remain in the quiet Possession of M^r Bingham, but also by falling immediately upon ways and means of sending him the Ballance of the Publick Debt.⁷ And whatever your determination may be, if you Excellency will do me the Honor of Letting me know it, by a letter ☉ next Post, it will very highly Oblige, S^r y^r Excellencies- most Ob^t Serv^t—

JOURNAL OF THE CONNECTICUT COUNCIL OF SAFETY

AT A MEETING OF THE GOVERNOR AND COUNCIL OF SAFETY AT LEBANON, TUESDAY,
11TH AUGUST, 1778.

Present: His Excellency the Governor.

Jz. Huntington,	William Williams,	} Esq ^{rs} .
Jos. Spencer,	Jed ^h Elderkin,
	David Mumford,

Resolved, That Maj^r Joshua Huntington have and receive upon his request half a ton of sheet lead belonging to this State in the care of Mr. Elliot at Boston, for the continental ship at Norwich,¹ in exchange for half a ton of bar lead belonging to the United States, at Norwich, and Mr. Elliot, agent, deliver the sheet lead accordingly. . . .²

Voted, That the following letter be sent to the gentlemen to whom underneath directed:

LEBANON, Aug^t 11th. 1778.

Gent^l: It being represented and complained to me, that sundry persons belonging to your or one of your armed boats commissioned to cruise in the Sound have, contrary to the tenor of your commission and bond, made descents upon the island of Long Island and plundered the inhabitants of their stock and effects, and that without dis-tion, and in particular lately violently taken about six oxen from Colo. Phinehas Fanning, and brought over to this State— this conduct, you must be sensible, is unwarrantable and renders you liable on your bonds &c. I would, with the advice of my Council, advise you, or either of you, so far as you may be respectively concerned, to settle— compound the matter with Colo. Fanning, and restore him his property, least you be exposed to further consequences.

I am, your humble Servant, JONTH TRUMBULL.

To Capt. Peter Hallack,

Jonth Solomons, or their owners, as they may be respectively concerned.

Resolved, That his Excellency the Governor be desired to send the following to Capt. Jonathan Vail and Capt. Jeremiah Rogers, commanders of armed boats:

LEBANON, August 11th, 1778.

Whereas sundry and repeated complaints have been made that persons under authority of commissions given to armed boats to go on shore on Long Island to act against the enemy there, or under colour and pretext thereof, have unjustly and cruelly plundered many of the friendly inhabitants there, brought off their effects, and have not caused them to be libeled and condemned in course of law— You and each of you are hereby required to attend here on Tuesday the 18th instant, to account for your conduct in that respect— In the mean time you are forbidden to act offensively towards any person on Long Island, or to make any hostile descent upon the land in virtue of your commission.

To Capt. Jonth Vail and JONTH TRUMBULL, Gov^r.
Capt. Jeremiah Rogers, commander of boats.

[August 1778, Languedoc, at sea]

at daylight the winds from the north to the NNE, fresh breeze, the sky overcast we perceived the enemy a little to the starboard, fleeing with all sail set he did not number more than 25 at the distance of from two leagues to two leagues and a half we chased with all sail set to all the advantage of the ships of the line—we found ourselves at that time the third ship of the van we gained on them The winds continually increasing, squalls from time to time and some very thick fog at times we approached the Enemy there were twelve ships of the line that sailed in line and there were three or four others outside the line that appeared to be more than frigates, which we judged to be ships of 44 guns of two decks and at least six large frigates, of which one, sailing exceptionally, frequently ran along the line to give them orders¹ we judging that they wanted to avoid battle, having seen the previous day all their chests where they had anchored they had thrown or cut their cables and thrown into the sea everything that encumbered them, leaving nothing to go from the boats²

The wind increased still to the point that at noon we were at pains to carry the topgallant sails squalls from time to time and some fog the sea becoming bad the *Tonnant*³ lost its mizzen-topgallant mast, which caused it to fall a little behind, although making all sail possible the same frigate frequently made signals left rear wanting to take in the topgallant sails This same frigate signaled to them by canon shots for them to delay at 3 o'clock in the afternoon our advance guard shortened sail a little to give time to the ship of the line that was in the rear to catch up and to take in sail The line as much as the weather allowed us at that time to be within a canon shot and a half of the English rear guard, with superiority of sailing the wind still increasing, the sea remaining, squalls made it impossible for us to use the lower batteries we had sails dipping into the sea two fourths to the starboard and we observed the enemy two fourths on the same side wanting to take them from the leeward, the general's⁴ intention was to sail alongside them to the leeward at longshot to their center and at that moment give the signal to turn into the wind in less than ten minutes we were alongside at good canon range all that was made to vanish before four-thirty o'clock by the wind forced by squalls and the rain that obscured the enemy for the time at 6 o'clock the force of the wind obliged us to tack to larboard and the enemy to starboard, to promptly clew up all the sails and to put to the cap the forestaysail, to trim the mainsail and not having set the mizzen staysail, our foresail having been, the yard have been cut through by a ball of from 4 to 6 to 8 near the bowsprit in the fear that it might break

The winds from NE to East, continually increasing [illeg.] a violent gale and the sea very big. at three o'clock in the morning it was perceived that our bowsprit had turned in those places one had employed yards to strengthen it at 4:30 o'clock the bowsprit broke, the foremast did the same, and in the following instant the mainmast and the mizzenmast had already broken, a situation very different from the day before, and near an enemy squadron

MARYLAND DELEGATE TO CONGRESS SAMUEL CHASE TO GOVERNOR THOMAS JOHNSON, JR., OF MARYLAND

Dear Sir,

Philad^a. Augst. 11. 1778.

Your Letter to Congress was delivered and is referred to the Marine Committee.¹ It will be difficult & a Work of Time to procure the different Resolves of Congress relative to Captures. I have seen only one of the Marine Board, the only Instance he knows of is, that Cap^t Hawker says he struck to the united States.- As to the Jurisdictions, it unquestionably belongs to our Court of admiralty. I am almost sure the Effects are a prize to the Individuals.² there is a Resolve on this Subject, bound in a Pamphlet which is at my House. Jerry can give it to you. I will attend to the other Parts of your Letter.

For News I beg Leave to refer You to my Letter of yesday to Col^o. Lloyd.³

I much obliged by your kind & friendly Inquiry after my Health. I have been very unwell, but am now quite recovered. I wish you every Happiness & am Your Friend

CHALONER AND WHITE TO CONRAD-ALEXANDRE GÉRARD

Sir

Philadelphia August 11th 1778.

M Brown having communicated to us the desire of the marine Committee "to have laid before them a written account how far we have executed their orders respecting the french fleet.[]"¹

Agreable thereto we now inform you that the whole of the two first orders issued by the Committee were complied with and Shipped on board the fleet at Sandy hook and the frigate in the Delaware,² and we now have ready for exporting, two thousand Barrels of biscuit, containing about one hundred weight averdupoises, one thousand Barrels of pork lately examined, repacked and in good order containing upwards of two hundred weight averdupoises which will compleat the order for pork, hogs heads and feet they being packed together. The rice also is ready for exporting at Eggharbour.³

The Commissary general⁴ has been furnished with a copy of the order of the marine Committee, and we doubt not he will adopt measures for the Speedy execution of their order in conjunction with us. The articles of pease, beans, mustard Seed, Beef, vinegar and cheese, we despair of procuring any large quantity of untill the fall. We are now baking in this city upwards of 800. barrels bread p^r week; and we expect with the assistance of the bake houses employed in Wilmington to Supply the whole of that article Shortly. We have the hon^r &c.

DR. SAMUEL NYE TO CAPTAIN WILLIAM HACKETT

Dear Sir

Cape-Ann Harbour [Mass.] August 12th. 1778-

Thro' Inattention and a Variety of Business while at Home, I entirely forgot the empowering some Person with a Letter of Attorney to receive and dispose of my Part of any Prizes that we may send in—tho' y^e Necessity and Expediency of it is very evident—For should we send in a Prize y^e Articles of which should be of a perishing Nature, there ought certainly to be some Person to receive my Shares & to dispose of them to y^e best Advantage—If you will therefore—Sir, be so kind as to undertake y^e Business for me, I shall not only be much oblig'd to you, but will on my Return make you ample Satisfaction for your Trouble—The Agents for the Crew are Doct^r Newman & Capt: Joseph Noyes of Newbury Port—If we send in any Prize or Prizes I leave it entirely to your Discretion to sell my Part or store it, as you shall judge best—We have now a hundred Men on Board and only wait for a fair Wind to put to Sea—I have been very hearty and well ever since I left Salisbury, and find the living on Board more agreeable than I expected. I expect that our Cruise will not exceed four Months unless we should put in to France or Spain,¹ or be taken by y^e Enemy, or meet with some other Misfortunes, however that is a Matter that must be left to y^e Ordering of an infinitely wise Providence—I am Sir, [&c.]

Sam^l NyeP.S. Be so kind as to give my best Regards to M^{rs}. Hacket and all enquiring Friends—

JOHN BRADFORD TO CAPTAIN JOHN GREEN

Dear Sir,

Boston 6th August 1778

May this meet you at Philadelphia in the full & sweet Enjoyment of domestic Happiness, and may you may find your Interest less damaged than your Fears Suggested as I find they¹ left the City in a better Condition than was expected. A few Days after you left us I got her Majesty² into my Neighbourhood with all her Guns, Spars, & appurtenances & have got rid of all the Petit Maitres you left on Board. The Ship is now at no other Expence than Wharfage & the Expence of the Cap^t who was plac'd on Board before you went away, Our worthy Friend M^r Morris³ has order'd Me to sell the Salt I expected to have had a quick Sale for it but on offering it to the Commissaries for Victualling they inform me they have Orders to decline purchasing any more that Article from beeing so high in Demand has become a mere Drugg If I should be obliged to store it the expence would amount to half the Value of the Salt, Im treating with a Gentlemen who I hope will take it, shall esteem it a Favour you would be so kind enough a Drft on France for the Am^o of those Certificates & forward them by Post & to favour Me with any Command you may have here which shall be executed with Pleasure pray make my Compliments to your Lady & believe Me to be yours &c

JB

Boston 12th August 1778

I was too late for last Post & am come to this Date, have sold the Cargo of Salt at 30/ p^r Bushell to be paid for it by the 1st Day January it was the best Term I could possibly obtain for since the Commissary's here are forbid by Congress to purchase any more Salt, it has become a mere Drug the french Stores & Ships supply at that Price by small Quantities— I could have obtain'd 39 for it a Month earlier—this is a Day of doubtful Expectation an Anxiety among us, as y^c Cream of our Youth with a great Number of Gentlemen, of Figure Influence & Fortune are gone on the Expedition⁴—your Favourite Samuel my Son is among the Independents We expect they have been in Action before now, pray God send good Tidings—yours &c JB—

Head Quarters Portsmouth 12th Aug^t. 1778—

Sir

By Agreement the Count De-Estaing & myself were to have landed our Troops on the Island Yesterday but early on Sunday Morning I received Information that the Enemy had abandoned the North End of the Island entirely and withdrawn to their Line, near Newport—This Movement of theirs was caused by the Count's running up the River with his Fleet the day before and induced me to throw over all my Troops without Delay which I accordingly effected—Immediately after our Landing a Fleet under English Colours consisting of 31 Sail 8 or 10 of which appeared to be of Force were discovered Standing towards Newport—¹ As the Wind was Small & unfavourable the Count kept his Position but early Yesterday Morning got under Way with a fine Breeze and went in Chace of them—They fled before him with all the Sail they could croud but it appeared last Evening that the Count had overtaken them and was engaged and that they were Still endeavouring an Escape—They fired their Stern Chaces—

I cannot inform You when we shall make the Attack as it is uncertain when the Count will return and I think it best to wait his Arrival as the French Troops are with him— I am [&c]

MAJOR GENERAL JOHN SULLIVAN TO GOVERNOR WILLIAM GREENE OF RHODE ISLAND

Head Q^s. Rhode Island Aug^t. 12th 78

Dear Sir,

I have the honor to acknowledge the Receipt of your Excellency's favor of the 11th. Instant conveying the Acc^t of Byrons Squadron, but previous to its coming to hand had receiv'd similar Information, from Gen^l Heth and the Council of Massachusetts.¹ The obligation I lay under to you is not the least diminished from this Circumstance, but receives additional weight from your kind Promise to facilitate by ever means in your Power the Expedition I have the honor to direct—

I shall with pleasure comply with your request, in giving your Excellency a detail of such Incidents as have been in their Consequences interesting to me, or may afford entertainment to you in the relation—

I had scarce made good my landing on the North-end of the this Island, with the indigested Body of Militia & regulars which composd my little Army, before a British Fleet under Lord Howe² hove in sight & for some time check'd the Progress of our Army. Agreeable to the Plan of operations concerted with Count Destiang, He was to have landed four thousand Men at the same time, on the opposite Side of the Island to co-operate with me in any measure that our Situati[on] or that of the Enemy might point out as expedient or necessary—But the unexpected Appearance of the British Fleet prevented the disembarkation of the French Troops, and fix'd the whole Attention of Count Destiang³—After ascertaining their Force & Number he on the 9th. Instant determin'd to engage them—on the 10th. he pass'd the Batteries on the side of the Town, returning their Fire (without shortning Sail,) with a Broadside—As soon as he had room for the purpose, he formd in line of Battle and bore down upon the Enemy, who did not think proper to wait for his Attack, but crowd'd every Sail to make good an irregular & precipitate Retreat, which all their expedition cou'd not effect, as the french Fleet were seen to overhaul and engage them, and we have reason to expect (the first fair Wind,) a favorable Account of them—My anxiety to advance, determines me to wait the Count's Return no longer, than I can be justify'd from my Numbers, to proceed without him. in consequence of this Resolution, I issued orders to the whole to march at six oClock this Morning but an unfortunate Storm prevented their being complyd with—& I now wait for a change of Weather—business will not admit me to be more circumstantial—I have the honor [&c.]

Wednesday 12.

Same weather, with the difference that the wind from the NE passed to the N, from which it has blown with the same violence, The *Aimable*¹ was astride and fell toward us, we immediately paid out our small bower anchor hawser and drew in on our post anchor, by this means we avoided it, after that we dropped a third anchor. This gale gave us great fears on the account of the squadron.

RIVINGTON'S THE ROYAL GAZETTE (NEW YORK), WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 12, 1778

NEW-YORK AUGUST 12.

On Monday last arrived the schooner Hammond, Capt. Bridger Goodrich. He sailed from hence some time ago, in company with the Jager, Capt. Buchanan, for Bermuda, and on his passage took four prizes, burnt one of them, and carried the other three into that port, whither he presently after sent a long pilot boat from Virginia, laden with one hundred and two hogsheads of tobacco; he then took a schooner with flour and tobacco, and last Saturday and Sunday, on his passage to this port, saw eight privateers from Toms River in East-Jersey, three of which he took, and has brought them in; they are, the schooner May Flower, with four carriage, four swivel guns, and 18 men, from New-England, Andrew Geddrige master; the schooner Scorpion, William Gray master, one carriage, 16 swivel guns, and 17 men, from New-England;¹ the schooner Sally, Joshua Stutson master, six carriage, ten swivel guns, and 25 men, from New-Jersey.

The above mentioned vessel, named the Jager, took also two prizes after parting company.

1. According to a deposition given by the captain, William Grey, in the Admiralty Court of New York on 15 Aug., the schooner Scorpion was out of Salem, Massachusetts, had a crew of 37, carried two 2-pounders and 16 swivel guns, was owned a group headed by Elias Hasket Derby (whom Grey called “Elias Haskit Darvy”), and was captured near Egg Harbor, New Jersey. RICHARD HENRY LEE, CHAIRMAN OF THE CONTINENTAL MARINE COMMITTEE, TO
VICE-AMIRAL COMTE D'ESTAING

Sir

[Philadelphia] August 12th 1778

The Marine Committee of Congress have heard with concern that the Squadron under your Excellency's command was on the 4th instant supplied with no more than 20 days provisions, but you may be assured Sir, that accident and concurrence of Circumstances, not a want of Zeal and Industry to supply you has hitherto delayed the arrival of Provisions.¹ The enclosed papers will shew your excellency what orders have been issued from the Marine Committee on this subject, with the Measures taken and taking to comply with these orders.² The movement of the Squadron and the Number of the enemies Cruizers, between this place, the great resources of Provisions especially of the Bread kind, rendering a long Land carriage necessary have chiefly produced this delay. In future we hope you will receive a more regular supply, except it be of Salt provisions which the want of Salt, the great consumption of the army, and the Season of the year, renders scarce and difficult to be obtained. To your wisdom must be left the propriety of Spareing the salted provisions as much as possible, and using fresh whilst you remain in a Country capable of furnishing the latter in abundance, but for the reasons above given not well provided with the former at present. A considerable quantity of bread, flour, live Stock vegetables and water have been put on board the frigate *Chimere*³ and the Transports with her, but these I apprehend have not reached the Squadron. The Commissary General has fixed directions to supply your Excellency from time to time with Such quantities of Provisions as you shall call for.⁴ I have the honor to be [&c.]

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME EXECUTIVE COUNCIL TO PENNSYLVANIA NAVY BOARD

Gent—

Philadelphia 12th August 1778.

About six months since Council instructed you to suffer such of the barges, called Guard Boats, belonging to this state to be fitted out by private Adventurers at their cost & Charges to enterprize in the river Delaware against the Enemy for a time specified,¹ these adventurers giving Security for the Boats, & taking all they could get. But the preference was to be given to the officers & men of our fleet, on the same terms that others offer to take them, which were to find Victuals, ammunition & Mariners.

Something it seems has been done in pursuance of the above Instructions, for a prize is just arrived taken by one or more of these Barges. This circumstance leads to an enquiry into the time of Cruise which had been specified in this Case, for we had no idea of permitting the use of them till this time: Especially as the Enemy being gone out of Delaware, the first ground on which the scheme was founded, was entirely gone.— However, there is no design to controvert the right of the Captors to their prizes in this Instance. It is to ask whether the officers & men of our Navy have stepped forth on this occasion on the footing stated; Vid, to find men, & victuals, & fit them out. This includes in it, a renunciation of all pay, rations & other advantages accruing to them as officers & privates of our fleet for the time, as otherwise, they are not on the same footing that others offered to take the Barges.—

Council would be glad to learn how far their offer to the people in the pay of this state has been complied with, as they have reason to suspect, that some unreasonable men who acted under it have claimed to receive Wages & rations, as if they had been in service during the time. Your attention to & observations on this subject are desired.²

Df, PHarH, RG 27, Executive Correspondence (loose) of the Supreme Executive Council. Heading: "Council to Navy Board 1778." Addressed at foot: "To the Navy Board of/Pennsylvania—."

1. The offer was made in Jan. 1778.

2. The board's reply has not been found.

N° 13.

Philadelphia 12 August 1778.

Sir

I have had the honor of reporting to you some steps that I have taken to have collected the provisions necessary for the squadron in accordance with the note that M. the Chevalier de Borda¹ sent me. I have taken the liberty of asking of you your most positive orders on this object, all the instructions that I have received being only contingent and preparatory, without designation of the place or the time. Your two letters of 18 July are the only ones that have reached me on your part and they make no mention of this object, since that time I have learned news of you only by indirect means, the Marine Committee has just informed me of a letter from Gen. Sullivan² that as that 235. 159. 285. 340. 367. 346. 531. 228. 113. 320. 378. 300. 471. 208. 423.³ The measures that have been taken without loss of time put one in a state of being able to do it. You will see, Sir, by the attached note⁴ the result of these measures. I have asked that all measures be pressed in order to have sent to you immediately biscuits of wheat and salt provisions for the consumption of 20 days, conforming to the note of M. le Chevalier de Borda. The convoy will be addressed to General Washington who will direct his subsequent march either according to the knowledge that he will have of your movements, or according to the requests that you will address to him. I believe at the same time I ought to inform you of my arrangements by an express which I sent to M. Choin;⁵ you will have without doubt the goodness of sending me by his return your detailed instructions on the objects that I should subsequently follow. I have prepared provisionally the execution of all those things that you have confided to me and my zeal waits only for a word on your part to render definite and positive the measures with which you will entrust me. So that I may work ardently for the success of your expedition at Newport, respond to me on every point.

I believed, Sir, in the uncertainty of your latest movements, I should ask that a second [supply], similar to that which is going to depart, be prepared; in order to send it promptly to Sandy Hook, if the circumstances return you to your station. In any case, it will be all ready to send where you may indicate.

One is not at all concerned here about fresh provisions because they are plentiful. They assure me that the supplies of salt provisions are the only things lacking here. I am with an infinite respect [&c.]

Gerard

P.S. They want, Sir, to assure me that, in accordance with the assurance given by the Commissioners, salt provisions will be found at Rhode Island where this committee has sent you from here some bread and wheat by wagon.⁶

ANDREW ANDERSON TO REAR ADMIRAL SAMUEL BARRINGTON

English Harbour [Antigua]. 12th August 1778.

Sir!

Not having had the Honour of seeing you since your arrival on this Station, I thought it a duty incumbent on me to inform You of some Circumstances, relating to this Harbour and Yard, with a Copy of the Establishment of the Artificers and others of the Yard, and a List of the Masts, Bowsprits and Yards. This Harbour extends from South East to North West, about three Quarters of a Mile, and though it's Breadths are unequal, the greatest is not above one half of that: The Entrance is from the Southward, One hundred fathoms Broad, between two Forts; that on the Starboard Side is Called the Horse Shoe Battery, level with the Waters edge. On the Larboard side, about Thirty feet above the Surface of the Sea, is Berkley Fort: The Ships, for the most part, Sail, both out and in. The Bar lies across, between the two Forts, and I remember in the Year 1763, when Admiral Swanton, in the Vanguard had taken on board the Naval Stores from Martinique, I happened to be on board of Her, when She Warped into this Harbour, drawing at that time 23 feet Water; Opposite the entrance is a place, though apart of the Harbour, Called Freemans Bay; here Ships may ride securely, except in the Hurricane Months, in the bottom of that Bay, among the Bushes, is a tier of Guns, which is Called the Mask-Battery. From thence, in going up the Harbour, about North West, the Yard and Old Careening Wharf opens to view; the last lies upon the Starboard side, and the Yard upon the Larboard. They are about 40 fathoms asunder; there are few Storehouses on the Careening Wharf. The House is a strong Building, Erected since the Hurricane; it has three Capstans, and good apartments for the Officers, with Cellars below for the Boatswains & Carpenters Stores; above the Capstans there is a Sail Loft reaching from one end to the other, except an Apartment in the North end taken off for the Captains. It's Dimensions are 131 feet long, and 36 Wide. The Yard is a Peninsula, projecting from the West into the Harbour; its greatest extent, from West to East, is about 400 feet, and something more than half that, where broadest; there is a Stone Wall Ten feet high, which reaches from Sea to Sea, and the Gate is on the North West side. Upon the North Side of the East point of the Yard, there is a very good Careening Wharf; the House is placed over two Capstans, and is 91 feet long, 30 wide. There is 20 feet of Water at each Careening Wharf. All the Store, Boat and Mast Houses &c^a, are in good Repair and capable of receiving a great many more Stores.

Since Admiral Young Sailed,¹ the Artificers have been Employ'd (except in the necessary Repairs of His Majesty's Ships coming into Harbour) in Repairing the Launches and Harbour Boats; Making some New, and repairing the old Floating Stages; Building and Repairing Artificers' Cabins, &c^a.

You will please to observe, in the List of Masts, &c^a, that there are none in Store fit to make a Frigate's Main Mast, or any other Class of Ships upwards, and indeed, what is here cannot be depended upon; for notwithstanding all the usual methods have been tried to ascertain the soundness and sufficiency of a Mast, most of them have been found rotten in the Heart in Working.

I should be happy to be favoured with your Orders, which shall always be punctually complied with; having the honour to be with the greatest respect. [&c.]

THOMAS SHAW TO GOVERNOR JONATHAN TRUMBULL OF CONNECTICUT

Sir

New London Aug^t 13th 1778

On receiving your Excellencys Favour of yesterday, I advised with Cap^t Deshon¹ concerning the expediency of sending Water to the Fleet & it was our opinion that as your orders were peremptorily that I should without delay send of[f] as many Vessells as it was possible to get Water Cask for—which I fear will be but two or three Vessells.—² But at the same time supposed at the first arrival of the Fleet at Point-Judath that it was difficult for them to procure Water, but now they are in possession of Connanicut & the Ferries &^c that Water can be easily procured from thence, and from a free passage up to Providence with their Tenders, and the numerous Privateers with Water for their respective Cruises on board, shall after despatching what Water I can on board the fleet wait for further Instructions from the Count De Estaing—

M^r N Shaw³ has been on board the Fleet & heard no complaint of that nature—they wanted Cyder, Roots, Greens Onions &c. and on his return here recomended for traders to go down with these things, several has gone & going. MAJOR GENERAL JOHN SULLIVAN TO GENERAL GEORGE WASHINGTON

Headquarters on Rhode Island
Aug^t 13th 1778

Dear General,

In my last I had the Honor to Inform your Excellency of my being in possession of the Enemy's works on the north part of Rhode Island, & of the arrival of the British Fleet the moment we had Landed, as also of the Sailing of Count D'estaing in quest of them—¹As this unfortunate Circumstance deprived us of the assistance we promised ourselves from the French Troops, I waited on the Ground till the 10th at night, when finding my own troops numbers had increased sufficiently to warrant my advancing to the Town without waiting the return of the Fleet; I issued orders for the Army to march the 11th at six in the morning. But Fortune still determined to sport longer with us, brought on a storm so violent, that it last night blew down tore, and almost ruined all the tents I have. The arms of course were rendered useless, and almost the whole of our ammunition ruined. The much greater part of the army have no kind of covering; nor wou'd tents if they had them prove a sufficient security against the severity of the storm. My men are mostly lying under the fences half covered with water, without ammunition and with arms rendered uselss. The Communication between us and the main cut off by the violence of the wind which will scarcely permit a whale boat to pass. Should the Enemy come out to attack us our dependance must be upon the superiority of our numbers, and the point of the bayonet. How o[u]r Militia may behave on such an occasion, I am unable to determine—to retreat is impossible, therefore we must conquer or perish. Perhaps under these circumstances an attack upon us might be of great advantage. Several men have perished with the severity of the weather, and I expect more will; as I see no probability of the storm's Ceasing—all our hopes of assistance from the French Fleet are at an end, as this storm must have driven them far [off from] this post and I am very apprehensive quite off the coast—to combat all these misfortunes & to surmount all those difficulties requires a degree of temper & persevering fortitude which I could never boast of, and which few possess in so ample a manner as your excellency. I will however endeavour by imitating the example, to rise superior to the malevolence of fortune & My present lamentable situation as quick as possible; and if heaven will cease to frown endeavor to gratify your excellency's desires—I am sorry your excellency's letter respecting the Enemy's burning their shipping did not arrive till they had burned and sunk the whole of their vessels of war, and sunk almost all the other vessels to block up the channel—²The Letter of your Excellency, inclosing that to the Count D'Estaing, did not arrive till after he had sailed.³ The intelligence from the Council of Massachusetts informing that admiral Byron, with thirteen large ships of the Line, was spoke with off the western Islands also arrived the day after he sailed.⁴ This Account Says that Byron was spoke with the 24th of June—The Fleet which arrived here, and the count was in pursuit of, was Lord Howe's fleet among which was only five sail of the Line, the rest smaller vessels of war, and Transports. They landed no men here—I was apprehensive that some such event as this might happen, to deprive me of the Count's assistance. This induced me to call for more men than I should otherwise have done. The number of the Enemy are nearly thus—

2 Hessian Reg ^{ts} 600 Each ⁵	12,00
2 Anspachs d ^o 500 each ⁶	1000
Brown & Fanning 600 ⁷	600
22 ^d , 38 th , 43 ^d , & 54 th British regts 400 each ⁸	1600
2 Hessian Reg ^{ts} 500 each	1000
Whitmans Regiment ⁹	100
	5500
To these we may add a Thousand Seamen ¹⁰	1000
	6500 ¹²

My Numbers on the Island are about nine thousand rank & file. Deserters come out in great numbers. I have the Honor to be [&c.]

[Extract]
[Newport, Rhode Island]
13th Aug^t [1778]

. . . We are under great apprehensions for the safety of Lord Howe's fleet. Some think they have been able to run into Sandy hook; others imagine they must have gone off to Sea, and must have suffered greatly, particularly the Gallies, which the Officers of the Navy say must have thrown their Guns overboard, or sunk.¹ There is however a satisfaction in reflecting that the Enemy's fleet are likely to have suffered in the same or rather a greater proportion, their ships being more unwieldy, and their Seamen less expert, than ours. . . .

Mackenzie, Diary 2: 351. Omitted eleven paragraphs regarding the weather, fortifications, and disposition of British ground troops.

1. As seen at Howe to Philip Stephens, 17 Aug. (UKLPR, Adm. 1/488, fols. 314–18), Howe sent the armed gallies to New York before the storm arrived under the escort of H.M. frigate Sphynx, Capt. Alexander Graeme.

at day light the little wind variable from the NNE to the NW the sea still swelling we occupied ourselves with rigging forward and the mizzenmast to be able to establish some small sails the ship rolling too much to hazard setting up topsail masts as lower masts as we had in mind at noon

Latitude estimated 38 = 57

Longitude arrived 74 = 22

we set up forward a topgallant sail and a flying topgallant sail above and a staysail for mizzen at 2 o'clock in the afternoon little wind, the sky somber and overcast we saw to the windward of us a ship that came into range of us¹ as all our batteries were strongly lashed and forecastle and quarterdeck were cluttered with debris from our dismasting, the ends of the shrouds and other things, having lost all of the rigging we made shift with the exception of the forecastle which remained encumbered, we had thrown all the bulwarks into the sea, which were bales of cotton we had taken from a prize, and even six cannon, six pounders, that we had on our gangway, throwing all six overboard² it was very difficult to open the lower battery with the rolling, the ship came to pass us within range of the voice each one at his post we hailed it we did not hear the response ourselves our flag he hoisted an English flag at the sight of his flag we fired the second battery aft of the mainmast and the guns on the quarterdeck being passed he opened several gun ports of his first battery and fired several shots at us from Cannon of his second without doing us injury he continued his route $\frac{3}{4}$ leagues to one league behind us in our track during this interval we set up six guns of retreat and four of chase he put about and tacked to pass us to the windward on the larboard at long shot

We believed that he was going to take us from foreward he arrived luff by luff and came to pass our stern where he gave us his full volley, upper and lower, and castles, and musketeers at musket shot our cannon of retreat were well served and some starboard and larboard guns from aft he placed himself under our starboard head where he gave us a second volley our cannon of retreat obliged him to flee and he arrived in our wake where he received two volleys from our cannon of retreat we heard the din that our balls made on board the sun had set by this time he continued his watch in our wake we took advantage of the moment to change one of our cannon of retreat that had been dismounted and as we were in 35 fathoms of water the general³ decided to use the moment to anchor and to pass a shoulder of a trunnion for mooring—at nine o'clock we saw him pass alongside us by favor of the lanterns and I believe that he did not see us, having extinguished our fires and not having observed our anchoring he did not reappear all night the wind was to the east, light the sea still swelling

Le Vaisseau le Languedoc demate par le coup de vent dans la nuit du 12. attaque par un Vaisseau de Guerre Anglois l'après midy du 13. 1778

 diminuer les voiles; mais il ne peut ni arriver ni gouverner; il fait feu de six ou cinq Canons et retire un canon de ses demontés par la première volée de l'ennemi dont les boulets lui firent de long en long en perçant le tableau de l'arrière par la même sorte du Vaisseau non jusqu'à la quille.
 N^o. 1. Le Lord Howe pendant la chasse avait quinze ou vingt vaisseaux pour la Frigate l'Exgillon; elle fut aussi demate pendant le coup de vent.
 2. Le Renown vint de lui-même le combat contre le Languedoc, vint se l'insubmer de le continuer; la soirée fut longue et la nuit très belle.

The ship of the line the Languedoc dismasted by the gale in the night of the 12th, attacked by an English warship the afternoon of the 13th of August 1778.

A. The Languedoc dismasted of all masts, its helm broken, it had hoisted two small sails from its launch to try to lessen the rolling, but it could neither turn nor steer; it fired from its six after guns, a 36-pounder had been dismounted since the first volley, the balls of which raked its length and pierced its frame from abaft, the weakest part, to the manger.

B. The Renown of fifty guns, Captain Dawson, raking the Languedoc and the ship of 25 guns.

Note. 1. Lord Howe during the chase had left his ship for the frigate Apollo; it was also dismasted during the gale.

2. The Renown itself stopped the combat with the Languedoc on its own, nothing hindering it from continuing it; the evening was long and the night very fine.

JEREMIAH WADSWORTH TO MAJOR GENERAL JOHN SULLIVAN

Dear General

The Chairman of the Marine Committee¹ is very anxious to have the French Admiral² furnished with the very best provisions of every kind but our magazines of Flower are so very old that we can not find a sufficient quantity of choice flower. I wish the Admiral may be made acquainted with this circumstance as well as that I am but lately in office and had no expectations of haveing so large a Fleet to feed. as soon as the new Crops are to be obtained every thing of the best kind shall be procured for him, the inclosed resolution of the Marine Committee shall be complied with as soon as possible³ I am

PRISONER BEFORE THE COURT.

Samuel Ford, 2^d Lieu^t of the Effingham Galley, Charged by Cap^t Hugh Montgomery, of s^d Galley, for deserting to the Enemy during the Siege of Fort Mifflin.¹

The Prisoner acknowledges he deserted from the s^d Galley. That W^m Kilpatrick, (the 1st Lieu^t of s^d Galley) told him to go into the Boat. That he did not know where he was going. That he asked where they were going. That they told him to see their Wives. That they said they could not leave him behind, for fear he should discover the Plot. That a Scotch Guard lay at the place where they landed, and took them. That they was sent to Philadelphia before Lord Cornwallis. That he had his liberty to go about the City, sold Liquor, and used to go down the River as far as Tenicum Island,² to buy Provisions for his family while the Enemy were in Philadelphia. That before the Enemy left the City, an English Officer call'd upon him to know if he would go with them. That he answered No. That the s^d Officer then took him up and put him in the Provo. That he then Apply'd to s^d Officer by Letter, and inform'd him that he would go with them. That he went with the Enemy to Monmouth Court House, and on the day of Action there,³ left them, Bought a Horse, and came to Head Quarters at Brunswick. That he there received orders to go to General Arnold,⁴ at Philadelphia, which he did, and there got a Certificate from s^d General to go to Lewis Nicola, Town Major, and deliver himself up, which he did, and had a Certificate from s^d Nicola, who told him to go to the Commodore,⁵ or his Captain, and deliver himself up.

EVIDENCE.

Cap^t William Watkin, (of the Guard Boat Brimstone) declareth on Oath, That there was two Galleys and two Arm'd Boats ordered upon Guard to look out behind Hog Island. That Cap^t Montgomery asked him to come on board, which he did. That they eat Supper and he went to Bed with Cap^t Montgomery betwixt 9 and 10 o'Clock. That the Prisoner had the 1st Watch upon Deck. That when the Watch was call'd at 12 o'Clock, s^d Watkin came upon Deck, and at the same time Mr. Kilpatrick, the 1st Lieu^t, came upon Deck. That the Prisoner and s^d Kilpatrick were together on Deck. That the Prisoner and s^d Kilpatrick went into the Cabbin. That s^d Watkin went into the Cabbin and saw one of them have a handkerchief in their hand with something in it, which they put under the Ladder going into the Cabbin, as s^d Watkin went down. That s^d Kilpatrick said, Cap^t Watkin had better turn into his birth. That s^d Watkin answered and said that Mr. Ford had been upon Deck four hours, and that he had better take a Nap. That Kilpatrick said Mr. Ford did not want to turn in, and Mr. Ford said he was not sleepy. That s^d Watkin then turn'd in and went to sleep. That in the morning at day light, one of the People came and call'd Cap^t Montgomery, and acquainted him that there was no Officers nor Men upon Deck, that they were all gone. That Cap^t

Montgomery put his hand behind him to feel for s^d Watkin, and said, "Watkin, are you gone too?" (having miss'd him). That s^d Watkin said, "Not yet, Mess Mate."

The Court refer'd their Opinion to the next day.

COLONEL WILLIAM AYLETT TO FRANCIS LEWIS, CHAIRMAN OF THE CONTINENTAL COMMERCE COMMITTEE

Sir

Williamsburg [Va.] Augst. 13. 1778-

I take the liberty of laying before you as president of the Committee of Commerce an affair in which the Interest of the United Sates are concernd, the matter in itself may be too inconsiderable to require the interposition of Congress, but in its consequences may deserve their notice.

In February last the Executive of this State¹ granted me two Armd Vessels a Brigantine and a Galley to carry prov^s. to the head of Elk,² and I chartered a Sloop of a M^r Holt to accompany them,³ the Galley carrying but 30 barrels was intended merely as a Convoy to the others, and in consequence of haveing a convoy I engag'd to Insure the Sloop up the Bay at a thousand pounds, they all left york together, but from the Villainy of the Skipper, a thick fog, or the Sloop springing a leak which is suggested, she separated from them at the mouth of the River, & went into a harbour in Mackjack Bay⁴ where she fell into the hands of the Enemy; and as it appears to me to have proceeded from the conduct of M^r Holts Skipper, I have refus'd to pay the Insurance, In June, M^r Holt & self were inform'd that the Sloop was recover'd from the Enemy, being carryed into Annamassick River⁵ on the Eastern shore of Maryland by a parcel of people who had determin'd to quit the Enemies Service, and she was taken possession of by Smith & John Horsey two of the Inhabitants of that Country, M^r Holt & self immediately employ'd a Captain John Gwin who knew the Vessel to go over and demand her, but the Horseys refus'd to deliver her, altho we authoris'd Cap^t Gwin to pay all charges & engag'd to pay any salvage that those who recover'd her might be entitled to receive, they inform'd Cap^t Gwin that they had libeld her in the Admiralty Court of Maryland, and that the Court had orderd her to be sold at vendue at the Town of Salsbury⁶ the 20th last month, we again sent Captain Gwin over to repeat our demand of the Vessel, M^r Holt & self haveing agreed to submit the matter of insurance to arbitration, and in the interim each to endeavour to lighten the loss of doing what we could to recover the Vessel, and to take no advantage of each other from any step we might take, the expence of which to be equal betwixt us, to be settled ultimately according to Arbitration, I wrote letters to the Judge of the Admiralty stating our Claim, & gave Captain Gwin a thousand & Eighty pounds to purchase the Vessel directing him to get her as Cheap as he could, but to go as far as a thousand pounds, or further if he thought proper as we were Confident she would sell for fifteen hundred pounds here, he appeared at the Sale and again demanded the Vessel and made known our orders to him to Employ Counsel to prosecute our Claim, and of our intention of Appealing to Congress, if the Court gave Judgment against us, however he again failed in his application, and a person who acted for the Martial who did not attend, put her up, and altho he had nothing else to do sold her in manner contain'd in Captain Gwins deposition Copy of which is here inclos'd,⁷ he then went with our letter to the Judge of the Admiralty at Baltimore, and apply'd to a Lawyer who requir'd thirty dollars for his advice in the first instance, which was paid him, and who demanded a hundred pounds for prosecuting our Claim, fifty of which to be paid first in hand, so that from the iniquitous Sale, and the exorbitant fees, if we gain the Cause & pay a moiety for Salvage it will bring us in debt for the Vessel sold only for five hundred some pounds Maryland money. In these infant States Sir if these exactions are allow'd to be practis'd with impunity & such impositions tollerated I forsee that the most alarming consequences will follow, What man of Sentiment or property will settle amongst us, when ruin is to attend an appeal to our Laws, laws that cannot fail to invite thousands to settle amongst us if they can receive the protection of them, upon reasonable terms, what man can be safe in his property, or even liberty, if such actings and doings as is set forth in these proceedings are not prevented, a man would rather submit to the hand of violence than to engage in ruin in seeking redress. exactions and abuses in our Jurisprudence have heretofore exacted great commotions & even blood shed in a neighbouring state, and may not the same causes produce the Effects, Government being in the hands of the people, abuses of this sort will not wait long for punishment, after the grand object is accomplish'd of our Independance, peoples minds are raisd with the happy Ideas that are the never failing effects of perfect liberty, and which will purge off all abuses, altho it may be attended at first wth excessive commotions & difficulties, if not timeously prevented by the Wisdom of Congress.

The Liberty you gave me Sir to correspond with you has embolden'd me to express my Sentiments more freely than I should have done, under the Idea with which I set out, and also to request the favour of your advice, as well respecting the matter of insurance, as respecting the Sale of the vessel & other proceedings therein. I suppose if M^r Holt can prove that his Vessel sprung a leak & that she was obliged to leave the Convoy he will secure his Insurance, otherwise I imagine he will not, I send you depositions taken on the occasion.⁸ The iniquitous sale of the Vessel certainly cannot be valid, but I am really at a loss how to proceed.⁹

I have sent on the greatest part of the provisions haveing them first thoroughly overhald but I am much concerned to hear that they lie in enormous quantities at Elk expos'd to Sun rain & thieves, the consequences I fear will be injurious & may be imputed to me, but be assured Sir, that my fulest exertions have been us'd in haveing the business transacted in the most effectual & expeditious manner. what provisions are on hand will be immediately sent on, when I shall do myself the honour to wait on Congress to settle my acc^{ts} & then Hope to have the pleasure of paying my personal respects to you, and am with much esteem {&c.

William Aylett.

7. In his deposition, dated 12 Aug., Gwin contended that it was arbitrarily decided that only fifteen minutes was to be allowed for the auction. He further contends that one bidder, the only one who could see the pocket watch being held by an attendant, waited literally until the last second then put in a bid that was a few shillings higher than Gwin's. Although Gwin immediately raised his bid by 60£, it was declared to have been after the close of the auction and the other bidder was declared to be the new owner. MdAA, Maryland State Papers, Red Books, S989 (MdHR 4585-22).
8. The depositions are listed in note 4.
9. On 8 Sept., Lewis forwarded Aylett's letter to Gov. Thomas Johnson Jr., of Maryland with the comment: "If the Allegations therein set forth are true I hope your Excellency will devise such steps to be taken in the premises so that justice may be done to the parties." [Extract]

14th Aug^t [1778]

Fine weather after 9 this morning. Clear and warm. Wind S.E....

Five dead bodies, and part of a Wheel and Tiller rope, supposed to belong to one of the French ships, were found yesterday on the shore of Brenton's neck.

The French frigates and the Brig,¹ remain in the Seconnet passage. Since the departure of the French fleet, very few of the Rebel boats or small craft have appeared on the W. Side of the Island.

Mackenzie, Diary 2:353. Nine paragraphs relating to ground troops omitted.

1. The French frigates Aimable, Lieutenant de vaisseau Antoine-Stanislas-Xavier de Curières de Castelnau de Saint-Cosme-Sainte-Eulalie; Alcmène, commanded by Lieutenant de vaisseau Pierre-René-Bénigne-Mériadec, comte de Bonneval Ruffo; and Engageante, Capitaine de vaisseau Charles-Rene, Chevalier de Gras-Preville. The brig was the former H.M. armed brigantine Stanley, commanded by officier auxiliaire Boulouvard de Barentin.

Monsieur Count

No one can be more touched by the evil done to the ship of the line the Languedoc,¹ and share very sincerely more than I all the sad events that you envisage in it and are assured in it.

I rally myself and have the honor to rejoin you with all the satisfaction of a true patriot and of a veritable and zealous servant of the King who is well attached to you.

In going out of the port of Newport in the number of several cannon shots that the ship of the line Tonnant received, the worst is a ball of 18 or 22 that struck in the main topmast, eight feet outside the cross bars [?] of the top, which carried away a third of the diameter, which blow absolutely requires that I change it, if you judge it appropriate to permit me to do it now.

I am very mortified, Monsieur Count, that some violent hemorrhoids prevent me from the duty of going myself to report to you and witness to the sentiments that the present occurrences inspire in me. I have the honor to be [&c] at sunrise the winds to the east we saw to the leeward of us about three leagues away a ship that we judged to be the same one that had been unaware of our anchoring¹ and if we had not anchored we would have been at daybreak at that point and at that of another that kept us in view, giving us disquiet in the fear that it might also be English the ship with which we had fought had 22 [guns] of 12 and 6 [pounds] on its forecastle and quarterdeck it had killed not a man of ours and wounded five, if it had killed many of us, I would not have been astonished at it, we having been raked by two volleys

at 7 o'clock in the morning our disquiet grew we were aware of a squadron of nine large ships to the windward that sailed toward us whether they were English or French, the situation was critical, all the more in that we judged it certain that the two others were English at 9:30 o'clock we recognized them as our ships the *César*² and the *Vaillant*³ were missing they anchored near us and the two other ships made all sail as soon as it appeared that these were our ships; we worked immediately to set up some topmasts as lower masts and bowsprit and rig topgallant masts above we calculated that we were at 39 degrees of latitude and at 74 degrees 4 minutes of Longitude we also worked to set up a flying and floating rudder . . . as soon as our ships had anchored, we saw three ships to the leeward The General⁴ decided to have them chased and embarked himself in the *Hector*⁵ and four ships set sail In the evening we heard some canon shots the *Marseillois*⁶ was also dismasted and had retained only its main mast and mizzen mast it came to the anchorage towed by the *Sagitair*⁷ it informed us that it had also been attacked the day before by a ship armed on two decks and had been obliged to abandon it, without which it would have lost many men⁸

JOURNAL OF CAPTAIN HENRY DUNCAN, R.N.

11th [August].—At 3 a.m. saw the French fleet steering after us. They consisted of twelve two-decked ships; two 90-, six 74-, three 64-, and one 50-gun ships. Course, SE by S; wind, E by N; fresh breezes and thick hazy weather. At 8 a.m. altered course to South; half-past ten, to SW by W; at half-past eleven, to West; half-past one, to NW. By these different changes of course, which were performed in succession from the van, our fleet made a considerable circle; and the French continuing to steer for our rear, they got so far to leeward that by four o'clock the greater part of our fleet, had they tacked, could have weathered the French fleet; but by this time the wind had increased to a gale, with a great sea, so that we should now been deprived of the use of the fireships; nor indeed would it [have] been prudent to have brought two fleets to action in such weather and so late in the day, when nothing decisive could possibly be done. A little before dark the French bore away SW by W, and soon after we brought to on the starboard tack. During this night, between the 11th and 12th, it blew very hard, with a great sea. At daylight in the morning of the 12th, only seventeen sail of our fleet were in sight. Saw nothing of the French fleet. At 1 p.m. the *Apollo*¹ lost her main and mizen topmasts; at mid-night lost sight of the Apollo.

On the morning of the 14th the gale abated. Commodore Elliot² hoisted his pennant on board the Eagle,³ and bore up for Sandy Hook with the Trident,⁴ Cornwall,⁵ Somerset,⁶ Nonsuch,⁷ and three other ships. Anchored outside the Hook the evening of the 17th.

JOURNAL OF THE CONTINENTAL CONGRESS

[Philadelphia] Friday, August 14, 1778

Resolved, That the vice president and supreme executive council of this State,¹ be requested to station one of their gallies, under command of a vigilant officer, near the mouth of the Cape May channel, with orders to search all vessels that may be outward bound, either through Cape May channel or the Delaware; and if any such shall be found exporting provisions contrary to the embargo, that they be brought before government, to answer for such, their misconduct.²

Resolved, That the governor of New Jersey³ be requested to take the most effectual measures to enforce the due observance of the embargo, as Congress consider it of the first importance to continue the distress prevailing in the enemy's fleet and army at New York for provisions; and because there is reason to apprehend that the coast trade with provisions may be productive of supply to the enemy, either through the vigilance of the cruisers, or by ill designing avaritious men.

MAJOR GENERAL BENEDICT ARNOLD TO VICE-AMIRAL COMTE D’ESTAING

Philad^a. Aug^t. 14th. 1778—

Sir

On the 12 July¹ I did myself the honor of introducing to your Excellency’s particular notice M^r. Seagrove [a] Gentleman of my Acquaintance, of whom I have the highest opinion, both as a Gentleman of Honor, and one firmly attached to this Country, which he has evinced on many occasions—

To my great surprize I was yesterday told that from Information given to the Marine Committe by some Scoundrill out of private pique to M^r. Seagrove, the Committe inadvertently wrote Mons^r. Gerard that M^r. Seagrove was a Person of suspicious Character, which Information I am told Mons^r. Gerard has transmitted to your Excellency² and as it may operate to the prejudice of a Worthy, Honest Man, I have now taken the liberty of setting your Excellency right in the matter, and of assuring you I will answer for the Conduct of M^r. Seagrove with my Life & Fortune—

I have the honor to be [&c.]

B Arnold

1. In his letter of 12 July, from Philadelphia, Arnold wrote to d’Estaing for the purpose of “of paying you my congratulatory Compliments on your safe Arrival in America, and of recommending to your particular Notice, the Bearer Major Franks, my Aid de Camp and M^r. Seagrove, a young Gentleman of this Place, who are ambitious of the honor of serving under The Count D’Estaing, and of being Eyewitnesses of your Conquest over our mutual Enemies.” FrPNA, Marine B¹, vol. 146, fols., 38–39. Seagrove worked with William Constable of New York to supply the Continental Army.

2. Conrad-Alexandre Gérard, French minister plenipotentiary, in Philadelphia. Gerard enclosed in a letter on 12 Aug. 1778 the following information to d’Estaing:

“James Seagrove merchant was Partner in Trade with Charles M^rEvers a known and avowed enemy to these states, He continued in New York in 1776 when the enemy took possession of it, and was under their protection at New York and Philadelphia until the enemy left Philadelphia in June last, when he remained in Philadelphia, having sent a vessel with part of his property with the fleet bound to New York which was taken and brought into Egg Harbour, since which he hath gone on board the French Admiral.

He may be justly suspected of designs inimical to these States, and the Fleet on board which he is intertained." FrPNA, Marine B⁴, vol. 143, fols. 146–47.

Others raised doubts regarding Seagrove's loyalty to the Continental cause at various points; in 1780, Philadelphia issued a warrant for the arrest of Seagrove and his business partner William Constable, believing them to be "enemies to the American cause." Despite this wartime record, Seagrove went on to serve as an American collector of customs and inspector at St. Mary's, Georgia, and an Indian agent to the Creeks. MAJOR GENERAL WILLIAM HEATH TO MAJOR GENERAL JOHN SULLIVAN

Head Quarters Boston 14th Aug^t 1778

Dear Sir

I have sent to the Navy Board respecting the Flour, and am informed that they have rec^d. about 300 Barrels which is not more than their present demand for the Shipping.¹

Captain Tracey² has been to Salem in order to purchase the wet provisions lately arrived there in a prise, which I mentioned in a former Letter;³ the owners have set the most exorbitant price on the Provisions, nearly one quarter more than the market price. To purchase them at this rate is attended w^h. double disadvantage to the public, first in giving more than the common price & secondly, enhancing the price of Provisions in general. If you are not under a pressing necessity for salt provisions, prudence & policy dictate that we should discover some indifference in the purchase of this Cargo 'till they fall to a more reasonable price, and as the greatest part of the provisions which were at Westborough will be turned your way perhaps you will have a tollerable supply of salted meat, of this I wish to be informed as soon as may be and will endeavour to do all in my power for you.—

15th. Yours of the 13th. from Major Lyman⁴ came to hand this morning. In consequence of a Letter received from Governor Greene on yesterday I sent on addressed to him or his order 38,000 Musket Cartridges & ten Barrels of Musket Powder—hope it will arrive in season.⁵

Hoping soon to hear of the signal success of the Army under your Command. I have the honor to be [&c]

On board the frigate Engageante
This 15 August 1778

To prove to you, Sir, the desire that I have to assist your operations, I gave orders for the troops embarked aboard the frigates *Aimable*¹ and Alcmène,² composed of a detachment of the regiment of Hainault and of Foix and of the navy commanded by officers attached to these troops, to land at three o'clock to go join the division that M. Marquis de Lafayette commands, to execute these orders. My troops, by order of M. the Count d'Estaing, were debarked to report on the ships of the line *Guerrier*³ and Vaillant.⁴ On this account, the troops that I land will be in small numbers. I have the honor of observing to you that my general furnished me with thirty sailors in replacement of my troops that the frigates that I have under my orders are deprived of. The squadron being under sail, besides, the troops that I can furnish, including officers and soldiers, will not be one hundred men, which however diminishes much the forces of the frigates. If after this true account you judge that my troops are immediately necessary, they will land at the place indicated. I await a letter from you on this subject. I am lending you my spyglass. It is a sacrifice I make with pleasure. But you should understand that such a glass is absolutely necessary to an officer who commands a frigate; his position obliges him without cease to observe signals and vessels that are discovered and that one must pursue. Were it not for these reasons, I would ask you to keep it always as a mark of my respect. I have the honor to be [&c.]

On board the Engageante this 15 August 1778

Sir

My first impulse was to lend myself to that which could be agreeable to you in telling you that I would send you the troops¹ that are in the frigates *Aimable*² and Alcmène.³ At the same time, I have the honor of making some observations to you and on which I insist all the more, as Messrs. the captains of the two frigates represent to me, that they are from now capable of only a very mediocre assistance, being unable to furnish more than eighty men. Besides, Sir, by my instructions, which Messrs. the captains who are under my orders received before I joined them, I am ordered to consult with you to contribute with our frigates to the greatest success of your operations. I beg you to observe that I would lose sight of this goal if I should strip the Aimable and the Alcmène of nearly a third of their crews at a moment in which it seems to me more necessary to keep them in their entirety than if the squadron were in sight. I believe, also, that I should point out to you that M. the Count d'Estaing assured me that I would find protection in case of action under some batteries which the circumstances of your operations have obliged you to dismantle—in consequence I must rely solely on my own forces. I have the honor to be

Resolve of Assembly 1778

In General Assembly of Pennsylvania

Saturday Aug^t 15. 1778. P.M.

The House resumed the Consideration of the Message from Council respecting the Disposal of the State-Fleet,¹ and thereupon agreed to the following Resolves, Viz.

Resolve 1st. That the House Recommend to the Honorable the Vice President² and Council to discharge on or before the Twentieth day of this Instant August, from and out of the Pay of this State, the Commadore and all other the Officers and Men belonging to the Fleet or Navy of this Common Wealth, except such as they shall deem necessary to Officer and Man a Number of Gallies not exceeding three, and a Number of Guard-Boats not exceeding three, without paying any Regard to Rank or Seniority Resolve 2^d.

That it be recommended to the Honorable the Vice-President & Council to sell such and so many of the Guard Boats as they may think proper Resolve 3^d. That it be recommended to the Honorable the Vice-President & Council to Appoint Capt. Thomas Houston be captain of the Brig Convention And Col^o Robert Knox and Captain Joseph Blewer to fit out, Man and send the said Brig upon a Cruize against the Enemies of the United States, upon such Terms as Privateers are usually Sent.

And whereas the State Navy will in pursuance of the foregoing Resolve be so far reduced, as not to need the Superintendance of any Board constituted or continued for that particular purpose, therefore the House agree to, Resolve 3^d. That it be recommended to the Honorable the Vice-President & Council to dismiss the Navy Board of this Common Wealth.

Resolve 4th. That the Gallies, Guard Boats not sold, Cannon, Ammunition, Weapons, and Implements of War, Rigging, Tackle and Furniture be properly secured and preserved.

Resolve 5th. That the Thanks of the House be given to the Members of the State Navy-Board, and to the Officers and Men of the Navy, for their Services to the public Cause.

On Motion

Resolved that it be recommended to the honorable the Vice-President and Council to take proper Measures for preserving and securing as much Of the Wrecks, Cargoes, Furniture & Apparel of the Vessels sunk or left in the different parts of the River Delaware, as may be possible.

REAR ADMIRAL SAMUEL BARRINGTON TO SECRETARY OF THE ADMIRALTY PHILIP STEPHENS

N^o. 13.
 Sir,

Prince of Wales in Carlisle Bay.
 Barbadoes, 15. August 1778.

By the Ariadne, which sailed hence with the Ceres the 23^d. of last month to convoy the homeward-bound Trade from this Island to S^t Christopher's to join the General Convoy ordered by Admiral Young to proceed from thence the 1st. instant under the protection of the Dealcastle and Beaver, I forwarded to you an Account of my proceedings to the 20th. (N^o. 12.).¹

You will now be pleased to acquaint my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, that the Snake Sloop arrived here the 29th. past, with a Letter from Admiral Young informing me of his intention to proceed immediately to England,² leaving under my command His Majesty's Ships and Vessels named in the Margin;³ several of which their Lordships will see by the enclosed Disposition of the Squadron have not yet joined me.⁴

The 30th. I dispatched the *Boyne*⁵ to Dominica to complete her wood, there being only seven days firing on board her and no supply to be procured at this place, and the Snake to English Harbour to get new Awnings and Cables in lieu of those onboard her, which, upon being surveyed, were found totally unfit for Service; And I was rejoined by the former the 12th. instant and by the Snake yesterday, which latter I purpose sending to Tobago to replace the Aurora for the present.

Yesterday also I was joined by the Favorite; and the 10th. instant three Treasury Victuallers (called the British King, the General Conway, and the Swan) arrived here with Provisions for the use of His Majesty's Troops in the Leeward Islands.⁶

Having agreed for the purchase of a Brig of 130 Tons⁷ and twelve Carriage Guns four Ponders, I have commissioned her, in consequence of their Lordships order of the 4th. of June,⁸ to be employed as a Sloop in His Majesty's Service by the name of the Barbadoes, with a Complement of ninety Men, and appointed Lieutenant Sir George Home of the *Prince of Wales*⁹ to be the master and Commander of her; And as she was built at Bermudas, is in very good repair, and so well fitted and furnished with Stores that there is no immediate necessity for her being supplied with any thing material except Provisions, I flatter myself their Lordships will not think her dear at £2250, which was the lowest price I could possibly get her for, the owners having at first demanded £2700, and I shall value the Commissioners of the Navy for her Amount and transmit to them the particulars of her Furniture and Stores as soon as the Surveys are completed. She is getting ready for the Sea with all possible dispatch, and, as there is no absolute occasion for her going to Antigua at present, I intend discharging into her from the Prince of Wales as many Men as with her Officers will make up fifty, and sending her to Tobago to assist in the protection of that Island; hoping that the Merchants and Proprietors will, in consideration of their request having been so soon complied with, use their influence to complete her Complement.¹⁰

An Account of the State and Condition of His Majesty's Ships and Vessels now with me is also herewith enclosed for their Lordships information.¹¹ I am Sir, [&c.]

REAR ADMIRAL SAMUEL BARRINGTON TO GOVERNOR WILLIAM MATHEW BURT OF THE LEEWARD ISLANDS

Dear Sir,

I was yesterday favoured with yours of the 24 of July and am greatly obliged to you for your kind offer of an apartment at Clarks Hill.¹ My being ordered to Barbados is the occasion of my not being able to pay my personal respects to you, and in my present situation it is impossible for me to say when I am to expect that happiness. I am very sorry the service will not permit me to send you a frigate or a Convoy in September. You very justly take notice of the weakness of my squadron, which will be so much diminished when I have furnished a Convoy for April² that I shall not have enough left to collect the Convoys from the different Islands. Thus situated your good sense will point out to you the impossibility of complying with your request. There are but three Convoys for the year; but last year, as well as this, application was made for a fourth which was complied with by Admiral Young's³ sending a single ship, which separated from her Convoy long before they reached the British sea. No ship, in peace or war, in my opinion, ought to sail for Europe after the 1st of August, as the risk becomes very great in a winter's passage with deep laden ships that can neither rise to, or run from, a large sea; nor is it possible for a Convoy at that season of the year to avoid a separation. The only use therefore that I can find for one is merely a cloak for insurance. Whenever it is in my power, you may be assured I shall use every exertion for the protection of the Islands and their commerce, and convince you how much I am, &c.,

SUMMARY

The start of June 1778 found Europe tense in the anticipation of the outbreak of war. Despite the fact that British and French ambassadors had been recalled to their respective nations in March, for diplomatic reasons both Britain and France wished the other side to open hostilities. The British wanted to retain the neutrality of the Dutch, so they hoped to maneuver the French into firing first; for their part, the French sought the support of Spain, and therefore desired Britain to appear as the aggressor. Both, therefore, continued their preparations for war, content to bide their time and shore up their preparations for war. Before July was over, fighting finally erupted.

The French Toulon squadron under Vice-amiral comte d'Estaing had already slipped out of the Mediterranean in April, but until June d'Estaing's ultimate destination remained unknown to the British, which posed a problem for them. If d'Estaing joined the Brest squadron under Amiral Comte Louis Guilloet d'Orvilliers, the combined French squadrons could overpower the British ships in the English Channel. In light of this, the British delayed the planned dispatch of Vice Admiral John Byron to North America. The British finally ordered Byron to sail on 5 June, and he left Britain on 9 June, far behind d'Estaing.

With Byron dispatched in pursuit of d'Estaing, Admiral the Honorable Augustus Keppel in command of the British channel fleet put out on 13 June in an attempt to secure the British homeland. Four days later, his ships attacked three French frigates. Two of these he captured; but the third, Belle Poule, managed to escape. Louis XVI seized on this event to justify a declaration of a state of war. A week after this encounter, Keppel—concerned that the French at Brest outnumbered him—returned to port to await reinforcements. With his fleet bolstered, Keppel sallied forth again on 9 July, with more ships-of-the-line joining him at sea. He arrived near the island of Ushant (Île d'Ouessant) on 19 July. The French fleet under d'Orvilliers met the challenge, sailing out of Brest on 23 July. The fleets were nearly evenly matched: Keppel's fleet boasted thirty ships-of-the-line to d'Orvilliers's thirty-two. When Keppel interposed himself between the French fleet and Brest, battle became unavoidable.

On 27 July at the Battle of Ushant the fleets fought an inconclusive engagement, with generally light casualties and no losses of ships. Without a decisive victory over the French, however, the British would have to proceed cautiously, because the threat of invasion loomed if the French Navy gained the upper hand, especially if they could combine naval forces with the Spanish. From this point of the war forward, British planners would have to factor in defense of Great Britain against invasion when determining the deployment of their naval forces to America.

Amid the moves of the British and the French, the Americans in the European Theater dealt with problems far smaller in scope and scale, though dramatic in their own ways. The Continental Commissioners and captains in France struggled with numerous administrative and personnel challenges among the crews of their vessels and problems with French administrators.

The crew of frigate Boston presented Captain Samuel Tucker a number of difficulties. While Tucker continued to deal with the aftermath of a failed mutiny attempt in May, he also encountered discontent among the frigate's French sailors; they thought that they had signed aboard for a single cruise, whereas Tucker maintained they had agreed to serve until the frigate returned to Boston. As tensions grew, the French alleged mistreatment at the hands of the Continental officers and then sought the aid of French officials. The French officials gave the aggrieved crewmen a sympathetic hearing, and eventually high authorities on both the French and Continental sides became involved.

While dissent among his crew troubled Tucker, it wracked Captain John Paul Jones of Ranger. During his late cruise in the Irish Sea, great discontent had arisen between him and his crew. Ranger's crew, who had expected less discipline and more prize taking, resented their captain's authoritarian manner. When Jones placed his first officer, Lieutenant Thomas Simpson, under arrest, charged with disobedience of orders, his crew supported the lieutenant rather than their captain. As tension grew, the Continental Commissioners worked to defuse the situation, ultimately giving Simpson command of Ranger and Jones expectation of command of a new and more formidable warship in Europe. In June, July, and August, Jones explored his options.

Beyond issues with their crews, Continental captains engaged in several disputes with the French. The French, at least until the outbreak of open war, refused to house prisoners taken from English ships that had been brought into port in Continental vessels. Consequently, the prisoners languished in the ships. Benjamin Franklin, one of the American Commissioners, continued his efforts to exchange these British prisoners for Americans held in England. Additionally, issues arose regarding the collection of customs duties from the Continental vessels. The attempt of the Farmers-General—responsible for French customs revenues—to levy duties on the Continental ships led to a dispute that involved the Continental Commissioners and French ministers.

Continental vessels continued their operations, though the major actions of the British and French fleets overshadowed their efforts. In June, Tucker and Boston sailed from France, taking four prizes, and returned to L'Orient in early July. Continental authorities hoped for a more substantial foray involving the three ships then in France: Boston under Tucker, Ranger under Simpson, and Providence under Captain Abraham Whipple, who as senior captain, would also serve as commodore of the expedition. The Continental ships set out as a squadron, intending for North America, in early August.

CAPTAIN JOHN PAUL JONES, CONTINENTAL NAVY,
TO AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE

[June, 1778]¹

When much present Gain is the ruling principle of officers in an Infant Navy, it is no wonder that they do not cultivate by their precepts nor enforce by their Example the principles of Dutiful Subordination and Cheerful unrepining Obedience in those who are under their Command;— nor is it strange that this principle should weaken the sacred Bonds of Order and Disciplin—and introduce the baneful Idea of Licentiousness and Free-Agency under the spacious Name of "Liberty."

On the contrary when at this Glorious Area [i.e., Æra], the Noble minded step forth together as Officers, making the cause of Injured Men their own—preferring Honor without much present Gain to much present Gain without Honor and wishing for nothing so much as for Danger when lasting Honor and the consciousness of having deserved it must be their great reward; It will be as natural for such Men to diffuse their liberal disposition to all who serve under their Command as it is for the sun to diffuse its warmth:—and under such happy circumstances dutiful Subordination, cheerful ardent unrepining Obedience, and strict Disciplin must follow of Course— Yet such subordination in a Navy would be perfectly compatible with what they call "Fighting for Liberty," as it would be the very means of attaining it.

The former of these Characters, not alas! as I could wish the latter, may in my Opinion be applied to the Officers of the Ranger:—but it is my province only to relate circumstances?—

Before I began to fit out the Ranger Congress had without my knowledge or expectation thought me worthy of an Appointment to Command a private Expedition of some Importance and had assigned Five Ships and Armed Vessels for that purpose.—That Expedition being prevented thro' the Jealousy of the then Commander in chief—² Congress again without my expectation thought proper to Order me to Europe in a French Ship, to take Command of a Ship of greater force and Swiftness than any one then in the Service. My departure in the French Ship was also prevented as the Commander did not accept the Terms offered.—³ In consequence of this I was directed to fit out the Ranger at Portsmouth in New-Hampshire; being a stranger there, tho I was Joined in Commission with two other Gentlemen to appoint the Officers I could not refuse my Voice to persons whom they Named, having no dependents of my own except Captⁿ Parke of the Marines who Embarked with me.—Neither the first Lieutenant (M^r Simpson) nor the Second (M^r Hall) had ever before been in an Armed Vessel or Ship of War—nor in the service of the United States—yet as I have since understood M^r Simpson began with informing the Officers and Men that they were only to consider me as a passenger going to France to Command another Ship—That tho' I would Command on the Passage, being his Senior Officer, yet they would in France receive all the Wages then due which would inable them to Purchase many fine things—and that as I would have nothing more to do with the Ranger, they would Immediately return Under his Command to Portsmouth.—It is the more extraordinary how he could amuse them with such expectations as the Hand Bills which I published as well as the Entry Book which they Subscribed expressed that He as well as they were to serve in the Navy under my Command.

On my Arrival at Nantes I was Summoned by the Commissioners to appear at Paris—it was however found necessary to postpone the procuring of the Ship in Question.—It was not till after my return to the Ranger that I discovered the real disposition of the Men on whom I had to depend:—this they Manifested on the 14th. of Feb^r. 1778 in the inclosed copy of a letter signed by the Lieutenants and Master against Captain Parke as a person who interfered with their Self-Intrested Views—however I even sacrificed this Man's Intrest and wishes to the Harmony of the Service—(i.e.) I sent him to America.⁴

A slow and half Obedience I had observed even from the beginning—but after my arrival in Quiberon, finding that the Ranger would not carry Sail, I was obliged to wait there 'till I could receive some Lead Ballast from L'Orient to make up the quantity which I had ordered at Nantes and which notwithstanding had not been taken in.—It was now that they discovered that I had other Objects in View than nearly to Cruise after Merchant Ships—and that in consequence of this conjecture their conduct evidently implied that they thought they had a right to Judge for themselves.—

Between Quiberon and Brest the Symptoms of the Small Pox prevailed in the Ship and the discontent became general—Eight men deserted with the Boat in the Night—they were however taken up and after remaining in Irons for some days were freely pardoned upon promise of future good behaviour.—Bad weather and other circumstances detained me at Brest for some time; the first Lieutenant told me one morning very abruptly that the people refused to Obey Orders—this produced some Altercation and I could not help intimating that it was the fault of the Officers;—apparent Harmony however was again restored, but it was of short duration. The next Morning a French Officer brought on board one of the Eight deserters—the fellow being a Canadian and having called himself a Subject of France, the Officer demanded his discharge and Wages, in a manner and in Terms which I thought Unbecoming—and therefore instead of complying I ordered M^r. Simpson to detain the deserter on Board.—This Order was given and Understood upon the Quarter Deck while the Deserter remained in the Cabin, so that there was Sufficient time to have Stopped him; yet he was suffered to depart into the French Boat and from the Ship:—M^r. Simpson took no measures to stop the deserter—but afterwards Seized the officer by the Collar as he descended the side—and yet became himself so much affronted that he declared he would fetch up his Commission and do no more Duty!—he went below and it was with the Utmost difficulty and length of argument and advice that I could prevail with him to return to his Duty.

Soon after this a new and extraordinary source of complaint appeared.—When the Ships Company signed the Entry Book in America, I was resolved, should I meet with any misfortune which might oblige me to put in to the Southward, not to leave it in their Power to desert the Ranger as another set of Men had done the Randolph when she was Dismasted—and put into Charlestown—therefore I gave M^r. Simpson, who had the charge of overseeing that Subscription, a slip of Paper whereon was written these words to be inserted opposite to each Mans Name Under the Term of Entry.

This I desired him to Read and Explain to each of them—Notwithstanding before the Ship left Brest it was represented as the worst of Grievances—Almost every one was Seized with the Epidemical Malady of Home-Sick, a disease far more fatal and lasting than the Small Pox; for they have been sadly afflicted with it ever since, nor is there yet any favorable symptoms of its abatement.⁵

Before I left Brest I was informed that this had brought on a Conspiracy to Kill or confine me in Irons and to carry the Ship Back under M^r Simpson to Portsmouth.—⁶ I however proceeded, but this Mutinous spirit of disobedience and Opinion of Free-Agency prevailed and was as high as ever even on the Morning of the Day on which we took the Drake.—As there was no appearance of the Enemies coming out I intended to put my former design in execution and Attack her at Anchor—this brought on a Mutiny and almost reduced me to the necessity of putting some of them to Death—during this tumult—fortunately for me the Drakes boat being sent out to Reconnoitre soon after came along side and was taken—this little Success tickled their Caprice and soothed them again into good Humour, in which they continued ‘till the Drake came out. Their behaviour in this happy mood of a moment was truly Gallant and would do them Immortal Honor but for the relapse which has again taken place.

Before our Success many Applications were made to me to leave the Channel, the danger being magnified into certain Ruin and this too by the Officers.—Tho’ I have called the party Volunteers who landed with me at Whitehaven, yet the fact is M^r Simpson took upon himself to bargain with them previously that we should leave the Channel without attempting any new hazardous Enterprize.

While I was off Carrickfergus the first time—I gave the Lieutenants my hand and freely forgave the past—yet a day or two after without any prelude or provocation M^r Simpson came hastily and publicly upon the Quarter Deck and addressed himself to me in terms and manner which amounted to a downright Challenge—I would not however lay hold of this but on the Contrary after the Engagement hearing him express a Wish for a Sword I presented him with the Sword of the late Brave Captain Burdon⁷ as the most Valuable gift in my possession.

His subsequent behaviour having laid me under the necessity of putting him under Suspension and Arrest on board the Drake, at the time when I intended to put the prisoners of War on board that Ship it became necessary to remove him—I found it most convenient and expedient to place him on board the Ship in the port called the Admiral where he had a good State Room and liberty to walk the Deck He sent an immediate Message to the Officers and Men which was delivered in my hearing—“that he was put into a Prison.”— In consequence of this false and inflammatory Message I could not but agree with Comte Dorvilliers that it was proper to Realize his assertion.⁸

CAPTAIN JOHN PAUL JONES, CONTINENTAL NAVY, TO BENJAMIN FRANKLIN

Honored and dear Sir

Drake Brest June 1st 1778

Accept my grateful Thanks for your much esteemed favor of 27th. Ult^o.—such a mark of your good opinion and approbation really affords me the most heartfelt Satisfaction.¹

It shall always be my ambition to do my Duty as far as my Judgement and small Abilities may Enable me—but you will see by the within Papers² that my Roses are not without Thorns, and perhaps it will seem Romance that I have Succeeded; which I am sure I should not have done had I not been my own Counsellor.

Nothing would give me more pleasure than to render essential Services to America in any measure which you may find expedient. Should I be able to lead my present Crew, It can be done only by the seldom failing Bait for Sordid Minds—Great Views of Intrest. If in bringing about the plan which you propose I may take the liberty to assure them of the Protection of the French Flag in the Channel against Enemies of Superiour Force—with free liberty at the same time to Attack and Take under that sanction such of the Enemies ships of War or Merchantmen as may be met with of equal or inferiour Force; perhaps I may succeed and gain them over by the means—nor will it [be] necessary to tell them our real Object.

If I am not at liberty to give them such assurance and their Homesickness should continue—I could wish that such of the Officers as may appear dangerously Ill might have liberty to lay down their too heavy Commissions or Warrants—and that others might be given to Men of stronger Nerves, who would be too Proud to think themselves Servants by the Year.—I believe such Men may be found even among the American Subjects in France.

If it should be consistent to order the Boston Frigate to come here from Bordeaux, perhaps such exchanges might be made as would be for the Intrest and Harmony of the Service and we might perhaps soon be able to assemble a sufficient number of Officers to form a Court.³

The Duc de Chartres⁴ has shewn me sundry attentions and expressed his inclination to facilitate my Obtaining the Ship Built at Amsterdam⁵—I believe I could easily obtain letters to the same effect from all the principle people here—but shall take no step of that kind without your approbation. If the prisoners should be exchanged in Europe I believe it would be possible to man that ship with Americans. I could have manned two such with French Volunteers since I arrived.—the Ranger is Crank, Sails Slow, and is of a triffling Force—at this Period of the War almost every one of the Enemies Cruizers is more than her Match—yet I mean not to complain—I demand nothing, and tho I know that it was the Intention of Congress to give me that Ship,⁶ I am now ready to go where ever the Service calls me.

If two or three fast sailing ships could be collected together there are a great choice of Private Enterprizes that I could Name some of which might effectually Succeed and would be far more for the Intrest and Honor of America than Cruising with twice the force.—It appears to me to be the province of our Infant Navy to Surprise and spread Alarms with fast Sailing Ships;—when we grow stronger we can meet their Fleets and dispute with them the Sovereignty of the Ocean.—These are only my own private Sentiments and are therefore submitted with the Utmost diffidence to your superiour Understanding.

Both the Ranger and the Drake were so much disabled that they needed to be entirely new Rigged—we however made shift from the Wreck of both Ships to Rig the Drake which is now compleated. The Rangers late Rigging was twice laid and much too thick and Heavy—the Refitting her shall be continued with Unremitting application and I hope will be nearly, if not altogether compleated when your answer becomes due.

M^r Delap⁷ with-holds in his hands, I know not by what authority the Captors part of one of the Rangers Prizes which he sold in Bourdeaux in January last—altho he then had express orders from me to remit that part immediately into the hands of M^r Williams of Nantes.—⁸ this with the prizes here being still precluded from Sale, has Occasioned and still Occasions great murmerings among the People.—⁹ the other Prize taken on the outward Passage was sold for a mere trifle at Nantes—and the Captors Moiety thereof is all the prize money they have received.¹⁰ I have the honor to be [&c.]

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN TO CAPTAIN JOHN PAUL JONES, CONTINENTAL NAVY

Private

Dear Sir

Passy, June 1. 1778

I have the Pleasure of informing you that it is propos'd to give you the Command of the great Ship we have built at Amsterdam.¹ By what you wrote to us formerly, I have ventur'd to say in your Behalf, that this Proposition would be agreeable to you. You will immediately let me know your Resolution: which that you may be more clear in taking, I must inform you of some Circumstances. She is at present the Property of the King,² but as there is no War yet declar'd, you will have the Commission & Flag of the States, and act under their Orders & Laws. The Prince de Nassau will make the Cruize with you.³ She is to be brought here under Cover as a French Merchantman; to be equipp'd and mann'd in France. We hope to exchange your Prisoners for as many American Sailors: but if that fails, you have your present Crew, to be made up here with other Nations & French. The other Commissioners are not acquainted with the Proposition as yet, and you see by the Nature of it that it is necessary to be kept a Secret till we have got the Vessel here, for fear of Difficulties in Holland, & Interception. You will therefore direct your Answer to me alone. It is being desired that at present the affair should rest between you & me.⁴ Perhaps it may be best for you to take a Trip up here to concert Matters, if in general you approve the Idea.

I was much pleas'd with reading your Journal, which we receiv'd yesterday⁵. I have the honour to be [&c.]

the Squadron

Since yesterday at noon until today at the same hour the wind reigned from the E to the SE fresh breeze

The Estimated Course I reckon	W. 3° N.
Distance Estimated	27¼ leagues
Latitude Estimated	30.° 35.'
Longitude Estimated	38.° 11.'

Wind from South Southwest. at noon the lookout spotted 5. ships, which I Signaled to the flagship, which made a Signal to me to Chase; it too, and the entire Squadron, joined the chase, we then put before the Wind; At 2 o'clock there was a rain squall and wind, I broke a studding-sail boom on the foremast, the squall passed, I set all sail and I cleared for general action, having recognized these as warships, as soon as the Flagship hoisted an ensign and an English pennant all the Ships of the Line of the Squadron joined, the Foreign Ships raised the Dutch ensign, at nightfall M. the Comte d'Estaing Signaled to Continue the Chase through the night.

At 7 o'clock in the Evening I came up with the rearmost Ship, I had everyone at his post, to guard against deception, I hailed with the speaking trumpet to inquire of the Captain of what nation he was, he answered me Dutch, I asked him to shorten sail to wait for my Commandant, whom I believed would want to speak with him, he only answered that he would follow me, I set topsails, I navigated the line, I was approached by the Ship of the line the César, which I informed of my Conversation: The Languedoc spoke to the Dutch Commandant, then he made the Signal to resume course, in consequence all the Ships of the line maneuvered in order to follow it: We learned that Six Dutch Ships were of the Company of the Indies, richly laden, had left the Cape of Good Hope 35 days ago and were headed to Holland.

Falmouth June 2^d 1778

I am just arrived here with His Majestys Ship Proserpine, and in consequence of orders received from Admiral Duff¹ have sent an Express to acquaint their Lordships with the sailing of the Toulon Fleet which passed Gibraltar on the 16th of May towards the Evening and came within two miles of the Proserpine as she was cruizing between Ceuta and Gibraltar, when we could plainly perceive the Fleet consisted of 13 ships of the Line (and appeared to be chiefly seventy fours) with five or six Frigates. After observing them for some time we went into Gibraltar Bay to inform Admiral Duff of their Force. On the 17th we got close up to them in the night so as to see their lights and Ships very clear, it was evident they steerd West or West ½ South, and had continued that course the whole day going 8 or 9 miles an hour. In the morning of the 18th we saw 18 sail from the Deck steering about West ½ South (much the same they had done from leaving the Straits) we kept with them til Seven o'clock and there passed in the Latitude 34°..42' and Longitude 9°..31' West. From the regular course the Fleet steered and the great press of sail they carried I cannot help supposing their point to the West Indies, but had they any inclination to return from where we left them and to cruize off cape S^t Vincents the wind prevailing to the Northward would prevent their interrupting any reinforcement destined to Gibraltar; and it is natural to imagine from the great haste they were in that their intentions are for making a passage, after having well observed how strictly the Fleet continued their course I thought it most adviseable to remain no longer with them but make the greatest expedition for England agreeable to my orders—I am &c

I intend sailing for Portsm^h tomorrow morning if the wind will let me

Panther in Gibralter Bay 2^d June 1778

The last Opportunity I had of conveying to you the occurrences arising in these parts, necessary for their Lordships' Information was by the Alert Sloop,¹ which left this place the 11th of April; since which I have received their Lordships Orders by the Proserpine, Captain Sutton² who arrived here the 27th of April She having in her passage from England washed away a considerable part of the doubling on her Waals³ which it was necessary to have repaired, to prevent the Copper Sheathing from being carried away, the same was done with all possible expedition and she was dispatched the 29th of April to perform the Service pointed out to me by being stationed to Cruize between Europa Point⁴ and Ceuta,⁵ to prevent the French Squadron expected from

Toulon, getting through the Strait undiscovered, and to watch their motions in order to come at a knowledge of their destination, which Intention I should hope was been fully answered and that their Lordships have by this time gained every particular relative to the said French Squadron, which was seen from the Signal House on Gibraltar Hill at 2 and passed by this Bay at 9 PM, the 18th of May.—Captain Sutton was so well situated as to be enabled to reconnoitre and to take an Account of their Strength, with which he came forward towards this Bay, when I sent an Officer to learn the particulars thereof. He then proceeded on, keeping the said Squadron a Stern of him, in order to give Intelligence of what he had come to a knowledge of to Sir Thomas Rich in His Majestys ship Enterprize, stationed to cooperate in the same Service with him, in the Entrance of the Straits, between Capes Spartel and Trafalgar⁶ and as the Enterprize had not left this Place, from recruiting her Water and Provisions, but a few Hours before, I am led to believe they soon joined, and took such measures as were the most likely to effectuate the Service required of them. Captain Sutton's Intelligence gave me to understand that the French Squadron consisted of Fourteen Sail of the Line and Three Frigates accompanied by three ships which he conceived to be Victuallers or Store Ships and this account tolerably well corroborated by the Information I have gained from different Merchant Ships who were in company with the French Squadron down the Mediterranean, and from what I saw of them from Europa Point; but I have obtained nothing that can be depended on respecting the Course the said Squadron steered after passing the Straits, as the *Levant*⁷ at the time this Circumstance happened was but just return'd from her Cruize, as soon as she could be got ready, by replacing a set of rigging for her Fore Mast, repairing other defects, and recruiting her Water and provisions she was dispatched off Cape S^t Vincent to discover if the above Squadron should be Cruizing there in which Event she was to endeavour to get at a proper distance, to the North-West of the same in the Track of the Ships from England bound this way for whom she was to Cruize, in order to Give advice of that matter, that proper steps might be taken in order to avoid the said Squadron. She sailed the 20th last month and is now in execution of that Service

You will be pleased to inform their Lordships that as soon as I was advised of the extraordinary preparations of the Spaniards in the equipment of a Naval Force respecting which you have a particular account in my Letter of the 10th of April (by the Alert) I thought it necessary to give the direction which you will see on perusal of the enclosed Copy of my Letter to Captain Murray of the Levant previous to his leaving this place to proceed on his late Cruize, but the conduct of the Spaniards since that time has been much altered; and M^r Consul Hardy⁸ writes me (and I have it also from other hands) that they have not only relaxed in their preparations but have actually began in some measure to dismantle their Ships; by unbending their sails and striking their Yards and Top mast.

As I understand by the People of your Ship you was going to Nantes on my Arrival at this place my intention was to have applied for their Liberty & have sent them in exchange of mine, but they have prevented me from doing it, by taking my boat in the night and going to France, in this case I should lay myself under the utmost Obligation if could be in your Power to free M^r Benest my Lieutenant and his Men from Confinement and obtain permission for their speedy return here.¹ your people easily got away as we put no guard over them and had given them all the Liberty in our power. there is still a young lad belonging to you whom you may depend I shall treat as my own, and shall send him to you as soon as I can find an Opportunity in like manner I repeat my entreaties that you will greatly favor me in obtaining for my People their Liberty, and reciprocally in the like or any other Occasion shall be happy of retaliating the favour I remain most unfeignedly [&c.]

CAPTAIN JOHN PAUL JONES, CONTINENTAL NAVY,
TO AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE

Gentlemen

Brest June 3^d 1778.

Your letter of the 25th Ult^{o:1} I rec^d. by Yesterdays post:—I frankly ask your pardon for the undue liberty which I took the 16th: Ult^{o:2} when I ventured to sign a draft upon you for the purpose of supplying the people under my Command with necessary Cloathing &^{ca}:—and I promise you never to be guilty of the like Offence again.—

I hope you do not however mean to impute to me a desire to receive “Presents of the public Money”—or even to touch a Dollar of it for any private purpose of my own?—On the contrary I need not now assert that I stepped forth at the beginning from Nobler motives?—my Accounts before I left America testify that I am more than Fifteen hundred pounds in Advance for the Public Service exclusive of any concern with the Ranger—And as for Wages I never received any.—

Had I not previously determined to keep the Prisoners here they would have been sent away in the Drake long before now:—My embarrassed Situation will in the Eye of Candor Appologize for my not sending you a more early information of the particulars of my Cruise and of the Prizes which I have made.—

On my passage from America I took two Brigantines both from Malaga for England—the One Arrived safe at Nantes and being sold by Mess^{rs} Morris & Williams the Captors part thereof was paid to them—³ the other Arrived at Bourdeaux and was, I understand, sold by M^r. J. H. Delap⁴ who, tho’ he had my Orders to remit the Captors part immediately into the hands of M^r. Williams of Nantes, yet he still retains it in his own hands.—On my late Expedition Three prizes were Sunk— the Ship Lord Chatham was sent here to remain under the care of the Intendant,⁵ she now remains in the port locked and Nailed up under a Guard; the Ship of War Drake with her Stores on board and the Brigantine Patience in Ballast are with the Ranger at Anchor in the Road—Mons^r de Sartine can inform you that the Sale of the prizes are precluded until he sends further Orders here.—had it been otherwise I cannot see how you could suppose that I had created Agents to dispose of the public property—and yet if I had done this perhaps my public wants would Justify me.—

The Rules whereby Congress hath been pleased to Command me to regulate my Conduct in the Navy authorize me to Issue my Warrant to the Agent &^{ca}: and I humbly conceive that it is his province to furnish you with an Estimate of the Amount of the Expence—If you wish for an Estimate from me, unacquainted as I am with prices, besides the delay, it may be very far from exact.—

When you determined to change the Continental Agent I could wish you had sent that information in a Letter to meet me here on my Arrival, as I had advised you of my intention to return to Brest—all disagreeable Altercation might then have been avoided.—My Situation is not now mended by your last.—the Gentleman you mention being at Nantes and no person appearing in his behalf at Brest.⁶

A space of Sixteen Months is now elapsed since Congress thought of me so as to put under my Command Seven times my present Force—leaving me at full Liberty how and where to apply it—and if I am not now Capable of supporting the Internal

Government of a single Sloop of War—I wish that some person more deserving had my place and that I were in America to answer for my Misconduct—I have “well considered” and yet shall persist in Justifying the Steps which I have taken and to which you allude.—

I am happy in having it in my power to furnish you with the inclosed Resolution of Congress respecting the Capture of the Enemies Ships of War agreeable to your desire—⁷ and if you are in possession of any Resolution of Congress which will Authorize me to send Lieutenant Simpson—to America &^{ca}: I should be Obliged to you for a Copy of it.—

I thank you with all my Heart for your Congratulation which I am extremely sorry that I have not better merited.— I have the Honor to be [&c.] Jn^o P Jones

I wrote you to 519 [Nantes] the 29th which I hope will immediately follow you to Paris—I then mentioned my prospect of Obtaining many valuable 458 [letter]’s to the Great ones at Court—But unless the present Storm blows soon over I shall not make the Application—perhaps my Friend you will be able to bring fair Weather & Sunshine—Or to take me in Tow ‘till I can repair my shatter’d Rigging.—I had the honor to receive a very Courteous and polite letter from D^r: Franklin—⁵ he has my Cordial thanks and I know that the other is not of his diction—my Kind respects await Doctor Bancroft—you will hear from me again.— and I am [&c.]

LIEUTENANT ELIJAH HALL, CONTINENTAL NAVY, TO BENJAMIN FRANKLIN AND JOHN ADAMS

Gentlemen

I request your Honours Favour in behalf of the Officers and Men, that you would point out some Method to bring the Prizes to sail,¹ which we took on the late Cruize, as We are much in want of Cloathing and other Necessaries which we cannot do without; many of Us have Wives & Children now suffering in America, the Time for which most of the People engag'd being now almost expired, and no prospect of going Home to relieve their distressed Families; as there was annex'd to their names the following sentence— and while absent from the eastern States which they declare to Cap^t. Jones that they know nothing of at signing, and of which they think he means to take an advantage;² this and many other Deceptions they Charge Cap^t. Jones with; of which I think it my Duty to inform you; He promised them half their Wages in France, which he has not done. M^r Simpson³ is put in a common Goal for a supposed Breach of Orders who always supported the best of Characters from His Youth up—I humbly beg You would remove Him to some place suitable to a Gentlⁿ. of his Rank till there is an Opportunity to send Him home for Trial, which is his earnest desire, that so he may have justice done Him—All the People are dissatisfied with Cap^t. Jones, which is the sole Cause of the Disorder on board the Ship, which He charges His Officers with, that they have not kept good Order nor Discipline—I never knew of any disorderly Action till they found they were deceived and unfairly dealt with; they are well disciplined and will Load and Fire Cannon as fast as any Men in Europe. The late action⁴ is a proof of it, although Cap^t. Jones gives them no honour, for it is reported about Brest that Cap^t. Jones said he was oblig'd to drive His Officers and Men to Quarters; which is scandalous to the last degree. I will venture to say that no Officers or Men were ever more willing for engaging than those of the Ranger, or ever behaved better; not a Man or Boy ever flinch'd from his Quarters to my knowledge during the action—Cap^t. Jones's mode of Government is so far from that of Ours that no American of Spirit can ever serve with cheerfulness under Him. I beg your Honours would remove Me from under his Command where I can do honour to myself and service to My Country. If this cannot be done must beg leave of your Hon^{rs}. to resign although I had much rather serve my bleeding Country. I have done every thing in my Power to keep peace and Harmony amongst the People; since we arriv'd here they are determined not to go out from this Port with Cap^t. Jones unless they are to go to America—We passed by many merchant Ships the last Cruize and left them unmolested; we went to get Honour and not Gain—we might as well have sent ten sail of Vessels into this Port as we did those that have arrived (had they not been retaken). We have been seven Months from America & not two of them at Sea, the most of Our time spent in Cutting Our Masts and yards and altering Sails, to little or no purpose. M^r Bursole⁵ has deny'd us all Supplies we can get no Beef but from the Kings Slaughter House & what we get is very Bad; we have three Hundred People to Feed. I hope Your Honr^s. will take it into Consideration and adopt such measures as you shall see fit—I have the honour to be [&c.]

[Brest] [3] June 1778¹

To the honourable the Commissioners of the United States of North America, the Petition of the Jovial Tar^s. Now on board the Continental Sloop of war Ranger, most humbly Sheweth,—

That your Petitioners regard, & love For their Countrey, & duty to there ancient fore Fathers, have most of them left there wives, and Famileys Cruized the wide Atalantick, in the most dangerous Places, greatly Damadgeing and distressing, our enemys, and all the Satisfaction & recompence we receive for our Labour, are, Vain and Flattering promisses, likewise arbitrary Proceedings, which Causes a general murmur & uneasiness among all on Board,— they therefore think it there Duty to make application to your honours for reliefe From there pressent Greiveances.

That the greates number of them entered in the Service particulrly upon M^r Simpsons our first Leiutenants account knowing him to be a Gentelman of honour, Worthey and capeable of his Officeship, and who is now confind inocently, as we think in a Lousey Dirtey french Goal—

That they that entered for a Cruize, or a Twelve month Expected to be discharged at the expiration of that time, But Capⁿ. Jones, since there entry & without there Concent, has ordered an uncertain term of time to be wrote Against there names, rendering them subservient to him during his absence from the eastern States, which we think Arbitrary and unconstitutional, & must when heard of in America be a hindrance and a preventment For aney Seamen to enter into the Service, or Depending upon the honours of Commanders, Like ours

count for them, unless Your honours, will take it into Consideration, in those Material affairs, and to See Justice done by the captors. On our first arrival in France we brought in tow [two] prizes one of which fetchd not half the first cost, & the other deliverd to M^r Delap of Bourdeaux of which can get no Account, or Satisfaction for—³

We have been Lying in different ports in France since the first of December last & onley made one Cruize, and that to perfection had we our rights, But we can expect no more, when we see our, Faithfull, true & Fatherley Officer our first Leiutenant used so abruptly, & we beleive & what wee have Seen without a Cause, thus have we been Deluded from our Freinds, Familey^s by ungratefull & False Promises and deceitfull Advertisements, we have fought & Taken, Ships, Sunk & Destroy^d, them and all the conslation we can send to our distressed & perhaps Famishing wives & Children, is, that there prizes is in the Hands of him, who has Deceived us, from the Begining—⁴

We humbley pray you be pleased to take our Case into consideration and render us some veiw and Satisfaction Of what we have gone thro with and to Send us home and not For us to Let our poor wives, and Famileys Suffer with Dispair, and we in duty bound will ever pray.

D, PPAmP, Benjamin Franklin Papers, vol. 61, fol. 97. Docketed: "Petition from/the/Rangers Men/June 1778."

1. The editors of the Adams Papers 6: 183, posit a date of 3 June for this petition because they believe that it was enclosed with the letter from Lt. Elijah Hall to Adams and Franklin, this date, above. We find their reasoning persuasive and so assign it that date as well. Ranger was anchored in the harbor of Brest, France.

2. These prizes are listed in a note at Hall to Benjamin Franklin and John Adams, this date, above.

3. Capt. John Paul Jones discussed the disposition of these prizes—brigantine Mary and brigantine George—in his letter to the Commissioners, this date, above.

4. As seen in his letter to the Commissioners of 16 May and their reply of 25 May, both in NDAR 12: 700-1 and 747-49, Jones had tried to distribute money to the crew but the Commissioners had refused to honor his bill.

AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE TO GABRIEL DE SARTINE

Passi June 3^d. 1778

We have the honor of enclosing to your Excellency an account of Duties paid by the Agent for necessary Supplies to the Ship of War the Boston, in the Port of Bordeaux.¹ As these Duties are very heavy, & the payment of any duties on mere Supplies to Ships of War, as on merchandizes exported appears to us uncommon; we beg the favor of your Excellency to give such orders relative to it, in all his Majesty's ports, as may regulate this for the future.

The Captain of the Ship of war the Ranger,² belonging to the United States, has we understand, put his prizes into the hands of the Intendant or Commandant at Brest;³ & no account has been renderd of them to the public Agent or to us. We are also given to understand, that in consequence of this proceeding very heavy fees are to be paid upon the sale of them. As the transaction is altogether improper, we must trouble your Excellency for an Order to the Commandant to deliver them, without delay or extraordinary charges, to the public Agent M^r. Schweighauser⁴ at Nantes, or to his order.

It woud give us satisfaction to annoy our Enemies, by giving a Letter of marque which is desidrd for a vessel fitted out at Dunkerque, & as it is represented to us, containing a mixd Crew of french Americans & English.⁵ But if this should seem to your Excellency improper; we will not do it. AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE TO

Sir

Passi June 3. 1778

We have received Sundry Letters from Lt Simpson, and Sundry Certificates from Officers and others, concerning his Behaviour in General, and particularly upon that occasion, in which he is charged with Disobedience of orders.¹ Without giving or forming any decided opinion concerning his Guilt or Innocence of the Crime laid to his Charge, We may venture to say that the Certificates We have rec^d Are very favourable to his Character, and at least afford Reason to hope that he did not mean to disobey his orders.

Be this however as it may, We are constrained to say, that his Confinement on Board of any other Ship than the Ranger, and much more his Confinement in a Prison on shore, appears to Us to carry in it, a degree of severity, which cannot be justified by Reason or Law

We therefore desire, you would release Mr simpson, from his Imprisonment and permit him to go at large upon his Parol to go to Nantes there to take his Passage to America, by the first favourable opportunity, in order to take his Tryal by a Court Martial²

We request you to transmit Us, as soon as possible, an Account of what is due to Lt Simpson, according to the ships Books for Wages.³

An Application has been made to Us, in Behalf of M^r Andrew Fallon, one of the Prisoners lately made by you, and his Case represented with such Circumstances as have induced Us to request you to let Mr Fallon go, where he will after taking his Parol in Writing, that he will not communicate any Intelligence which may be prejudicial to the united States, that he will not take Arms against them during the war, and that he will surrender himself Prisoner of War, whenever called upon by Congress, or their Ministers at Paris.⁴

In his autobiography, John Adams, included the following commentary after reproducing a copy of this letter to Jones: "The Representations in favour of Simpson and against Jones, were very strong. His whole Ship was against the Captain, with a surprizing Unanimity, and although Jones was evidently one of Franklins Party both among the French and Americans, yet his Conduct was so evidently wrong in some Instances, and so dubious in others that Franklin could not refuse his Signature, to all the decisions of his Colleagues concerning him.

"Jones had obtained the Command of the Ranger, under the Auspices of Mr. Robert Morris in Philadelphia, and I understood carried Letters to Mr. Deane and Dr. Franklin, which upon his first Arrival in France he carried to Paris. They introduced him to their friends among the French and Americans, particularly to Mr. Williams, and he was so universally considered as the Partisan of Deane and Franklin, that as soon as had made a Prize of an English Ship of War the Drake, the Cry of Versailles and the Clamour of Paris became as loud in favour of Monsieur Jones as of Monsieur Franklin and the Inclination of the Ladies to embrace him almost as fashionable and as strong. Jones's personal Behaviour to me was always, to the time of his Death as civil and respectful as I could wish: But I suppose that means were found to insinuate into him that the refusal of his Draught and the Lenity to Lt. Simpson were Effects of my Uniting with Mr. Lee against Mr. Franklin, although Franklin had agreed to both. . . . What became of Lt. Simpson I know not, but I have always thought that the arbitrary Conduct of Jones was the cause of great Injustice to him." Adams, Diary, 4: 124–25.

Thomas Simpson to American Commissioners in France, 8 May 1778 and 25 May 1778, in NDAR 12: 678–79 and 749–51; Certificate of Members of the Prize Crew, 16 May 1778, in NDAR 12: 701–2; Petition of Officers of Continental Ship Ranger on Behalf of Lieutenant Thomas Simpson, 30 May 1778, in NDAR 12: 782–83.

2. Jones did as ordered; see Simpson to Jones, 10 June, below.

3. If Jones sent the Commissioners such an account, it has not been found.

4. The appeal was made on behalf of Andrew Fallon by his brother, Augustus Charles Fallon, through Comte de Clonard, an Irishmen and French naval officer of some influence in the French Court. Benjamin Franklin Papers, 25: 577 n. When captured, Andrew Fallon, who was 15 or 16 years old, was traveling home to Ireland to begin his novitiate in a Dominican priory. Fallon was paroled on these terms; see Parole of Andrew Fallon, 11 June 1778, below.

SECRETARY OF THE ADMIRALTY PHILIP STEPHENS TO REAR ADMIRAL SAMUEL BARRINGTON

S^r: [Admiralty Office, London] 4 June 1778

My Lords Commiss^{rs}. of the Admty having received a memorial from the Merchants and Proprietors of the Island of Tobago representing the defenceless State of that Island, and complaining that the Aurora, which sailed from England in Novem^r last, under orders to be stationed there, for its protection and security, had not appeared upon her Station on the 30th of March, altho' she arrived at Barbadoes the beginning of January,¹ and therefore praying that more effectual Measures may be taken for the future Protection and security of the said Island: I am commanded by their Lordships to send you herewith the said Memorial and to signify their direction to you to enquire into the Cause of the Aurora's not proceeding to the station allotted to her by their Lordships, or why some other Frigate was not sent in her stead when she was diverted from that service, and to report by the first opportunity the result of such enquiry.

I have it further in command from their Lordships to signify their direction to you, to take care that for the future not only the Aurora or some other Frigate of equal Force, but also a Sloop, be constantly stationed at and about the said Island of Tobago for its protection and security, and not withdrawn from thence upon any account until others are sent to relieve them, And that you may be the better enabled to allot a Sloop constantly for that service, you will herewith receive an order from their Lordships for the purchasing of four, as soon as You can meet with them. You will observe that the Memorialists point out Bermudian built Sloops as best adapted to the service abovementioned, which their Lordships recommend to your attention in the purchases you are to make.² I am &c.

CAPTAIN JOHN PAUL JONES, CONTINENTAL NAVY, TO JEAN-DANIEL SCHWEIGHAUSER

Sir

Brest 4th June 1778

Your letter of the 12th. Ult^o:¹ duely appeared—but as the purport of it seemed rather to intimate your desire to sell my prizes at a distance than to manifest your Inclination to furnish in person on the spot the dailey supplies of Provision for my people and prisoners—and the Stores and provision of every kind necessary to re-fit the Continental Ship after an Obstinate Engagement.— I thought it required no Answer; especially as I had no letter from the Commissioners on the Subject:— and had the Commissioners still remained Silent, neither could I have given a Satisfactory Answer to your last of 31st Ult^o:² which is this moment come to my hands:— that Letter Sir seems in the same strain with the former;— but some part of it I freely confess is above my language or comprehension when you express yourself thus—“That I may take the necessary measures to assure us the propriety of these Captures,”—as I am not charged with having infringed the Laws of Government I think your Postscript might have been spared.—

In a word if you consider yourself as the Agent or instrument for Victualling and Repairing the Ships of War of the American Navy—as I came in here in distress the 8th Ult^o in want of Provision with a number of Wounded Men and Prisoners—You have not done your duty as you have not to this hour given nor offered me any assistance whereby you have Occasioned a loss of time and Money to the United States. It was your duty to have appeared on the Spot and to have ministred to our Wants.— If on the contrary as I rather think you consider yourself only as the Instrument for selling the Continental part of prizes— yet in this case too you have not done your duty.— It was your duty to have appeared at Brest to have taken care of the Public property and to have brought on the Sales—whereas some of it may perhaps now be perishing thro’ your absence and Neglect.— I have been thus explicit that you may not henceforth misunderstand me and that as far as we may be connected we may henceforth co-operate for the Public good of the American United States, and, I am [&c.]

AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE TO JOHN BONDFIELD

Sir,

Passi June 4th 1778.

Your Letters of the 26th and 30th. of May, We have recieved. The first accompanying the Accounts of Supplies &c for the Boston; the last inclosing an Affidavit, concerning a Plot, against her Safety.¹

Upon looking over the Accounts, We find some Articles, particularly fresh Beef, charged at a very high Rate: But We suppose this Article must be dearer at Bourdeaux, than it is, at Nantes or Paris, as We depend upon your attention to procure every thing at the most reasonable Rate. By the Rangers Accounts, She was supplied with fresh Beef at five Sols and a half a pound, whereas in your Accounts, fifteen Sols a pound are Charged.—Your Bills will be honored as you have drawn them

We hope the Boston,² before this Time is gone. As the Expence of supporting such Ships is very great, they ought not to be in Port, one Moment longer than is necessary.

As to the Plot, We shall communicate the Affidavit to the Ministry: But in the mean time, We depend upon it, that Captain Tucker, will make some Example among the Guilty, on Board of his Ship, if there are any, and that the Government at Bourdeaux, will punish, any person, at Land, who shall be found guilty of this Conspiracy, or any other like.³

By all that We can learn, there is a Junto of Enemies, in that Neighbourhood, who must be brought to Reason, by Severity if nothing else will do. We have the Honor to be with very great Respect [&c.]

P.S. your Bills are accepted.

LORD GEORGE GERMAIN TO LIEUTENANT GENERAL SIR HENRY CLINTON

Sir

Whitehall 5th. June 1778.

Advice having been received this Morning, that the French Squadron from Toulon consisting of Eleven Sail of the Line, One Fifty Gun Ship, and Five Frigates, under the command of the Count D'Estaing,¹ passed the streights of Gibraltar on the 16th. of last Month, and were left on the 19th. steering to the South Westward. I have dispatched this by Express to overtake the Packet, in order to give You intelligence of this Event, in hopes that as the French Squadron was so long detained in the Mediterranean, they may find it necessary to stop at the Canary or Western Islands,² and thereby give an opportunity for this Account to reach your hands before they arrive in North America, if their destination be, as it is supposed for Boston, And I am further to acquaint You that Vice Admiral Byron with Thirteen Ships of the Line is at Plymouth Sound, on his Way to New York with Orders to pursue M^r. D'Estaing wherever he may be sailed to.³ I am Sir Your Obedient [&c.]

LORD GEORGE GERMAIN TO GOVERNOR WILLIAM TRYON OF NEW YORK

[Extract]

Sir,

Whitehall 5th. June 1778.

. . . Some legal difficulties that I was not informed of I find were the occasion that the Lords of the Admiralty did not send you a Commission to grant Letters of Marque at the time I acquainted you it would be dispatched.¹ Those difficulties I have the satisfaction to tell you are now so far obviated that you will receive herewith, the necessary Authority to grant Letters of Marque in all such cases as the Prohibitory Act will allow.² These cases are ships in the service of Government, Ships licensed to bring Provision or Stores to the Fleet or Army, or for the supply of the Inhabitants, & Ships carrying out Prize Goods. Under that description only it is that any trading Ship can enter or clear at New York without incurring forfeiture, & therefore none else can possibly perform the requisites that entitle them to Letters of Marque; but of this you will be fully informed by the acts themselves, & the Instructions you will receive from the Lords of the Admiralty, I have therefore only to add my Wishes, that you may find the Authorities you are vested with sufficient for the purpose, & satisfactory to the loyal Inhabitants.³ I am &c^a Geo: Germain.

1. Germain had so informed Tryon in a letter of 10 January. UKLPR, C.O. 5/79, fols. 3–4.

2. On the Prohibitory Act, see Lord North’s Proposal of a Prohibitory Bill in the House of Commons, 20 Nov. 1775, and George Jackson to Sir James Douglas, 25 Dec. 1775, both in NDAR 2: 378–79 and 453–54. As seen there, it prohibited trade by Americans with any other nation and any American vessel involved in such trade was subject to seizure. The warrant from the Lords of the Admiralty to Tryon authorizing him to issue letters of marque and reprisal to vessels from New York to capture vessels owned by inhabitants of the rebellious colonies.

3. The combination of the Prohibitory Act and an embargo on exports from the port of New York instituted by Viscount Howe on 21 June prevented privateers from operating out of the city until October 1778.

DAVID HARTLEY TO BENJAMIN FRANKLIN

Dear Sir

Golden Square [London] June 5 1778

I hope we shall at length get forward with the Exchange of the poor prisoners w^{ch} has been for so many months in negotiation. I am authorized by the administration and the board of admiralty to make the following proposition. That you sh^d send to me the number and rank of the prisoners w^{ch} you have on your side to deliver, upon the receipt of w^{ch} an equal number shall be prepared on this side for the Exchange. It is proposed that each party shall send their prisoners to Calais and that the Exchange be made there. The port of Calais is chosen as the most unexceptionable for the admission of an English Ship upon such an occasion. Be so good as to send me your answer upon this proposition, w^{ch} I will lay before the board of Admiralty and will contribute all that is in my power to facilitate the Exchange¹ I am [&c.]

In a letter to Lord North, tentatively dated 6 June by the editors of the Franklin Papers and the Adams Papers but never sent, the commissioners proposed an exchange similar to what Hartley spells out here. “EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM PLYMOUTH, JUNE 5.”

Lloyd's Evening Post and British Chronicle (London), 5–8 June 1778.

1. The Gardoqui was an American brig, master Bradstreet Dennison. It was travelling bound from Newburyport, Massachusetts to Bilbao, Spain, carrying a cargo of tobacco, lumber, and potash. Rear Admiral Samuel Barrington captured the vessels on 26 May 1778, and placed the prize under the command of a master's mate of H.M.S. Prince of Wales before sending it to Plymouth. Barrington Papers 2: 19 and Barrington to Philip Stephens, 26 May 1778, NDAR 12: 754.

2. Barrington was en route to Barbados, where he was to await instructions before taking command of the Leeward Islands station. Sandwich Papers 2: 333. H.M.S. Prince of Wales, 74 guns, Capt. Benjamin Hill, commander, was Barrington's flagship.

3. H.M. frigate Milford, Capt. Sir William C. Burnaby, commander.

4. A report in The London Chronicle, dated 6–9 June, gave “Kindrey” as the name of the master of Peggy. H.M. sloop Martin, Lt. Thomas Chamberlayne, commander, was on the Newfoundland Station.

5. Vice Adm. John Montagu was en route to become governor of Newfoundland. His flagship was H.M.S. Europa, 64 guns, which was renamed H.M.S. Europe in July 1778.

CAPTAIN JOHN PAUL JONES, CONTINENTAL NAVY, TO BENJAMIN FRANKLIN

Honored and dear Sir

Drake, Brest June 6th. 1778.

Your much esteemed favor of the 1st Current,¹ which I received last Night lays me under a most singular Obligation:—I cannot but be deeply sensible of the Honor which is conferred upon me by the proposition; and I really think it affords a very fair prospect of Success.

In a few days the return of a letter from M^r. Schweighauser will I hope enable me to leave Affairs here so as to Attend you at Paris.—² I shall be happy in opportunities to prove by my Conduct, how much I wish to merit the continuance of your Confidence and that of the Prince.³

It gives me pleasure to hear of the Arrival of the Providence Frigate at Nantes—and as I believe the Boston is not yet departed from Bourdeaux, if you approve it they can Rendezvous here, which may enable us to regulate any disorders that may exist; and perhaps it may be more expedient that the Force⁴ should be United than kept separate. I have the Honor to be [&c.]

As seen at Jones's letter to Benjamin Franklin of 1 June, above, Jones wished to transfer disgruntled members of the crew of Ranger to Boston.

CAPTAIN JOHN PAUL JONES, CONTINENTAL NAVY, TO CAPTAIN ABRAHAM WHIPPLE, CONTINENTAL NAVY

Drake Brest June 6 1778

Accept my cordial congratulation on your release from purgatory and safe arrival at Nantes¹ I however wish you had favoured me with the News of the Continent, an account of the good Situation of our Fleet and Army would have given me much Satisfaction—Our affairs have gone swimmingly in Europe, I had the Honor of first seeing the independence of Freedoms Flag recognized by the Flag of France in the Bay of Quiberon last February and it is with much Pleasure that I can assure you that it is highly respected by all at Brest—

I am sorry that you did not come here in preference to Nantes—knowing as I do the difference of the places. I wish the Boston were here also as perhaps such Arrangements will shortly take place as may leave openings for the promotion of Officers of good abilities² besides if you will please to call on my friend John Ross Esq^r at Nantes you will see in his hands an account of my late expedition and one reason for my wishing to see a Sufficient number of Officers here to form a Court—³

You have been very unkind in not telling me a word about our agreeable Widow or my little affair of the Heart at Providence⁴ pray how did you leave all friends there for tho' in a strange Land I have frequently breathed a wish⁵ for their Happiness—I hope M^{rs}: Whipple & M^{rs}: Hopkins are well What became of the Warren? Was there any Account from the Raleigh and Alfred what was done respecting my friend McNeill,⁶ what respecting my friend the Commander in chief⁷ what respecting Commodore Manly⁸ How do the new Ships go on and how many and of what force are there on the Stocks? All these and a thousand other Questions are daily asked of me here and you must furnish me with the means of answering them⁹

There will be frequent Opportunitys for America from Nantes Bourdeaux L'Orient and Morlaix &c^c I know of none at present and Brest you know is not a Trading City, When I hear of any I will inform you—my Compliments to your Officers I bid you and them a hearty welcome to France and I am [&c.]

GABRIEL DE SARTINE TO THE AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE

A Marly le 6 juin 1778

Je suis informé, Messieurs, que le S^r Bersolle, apres avoir fait des Avances assez considerables, au Capitaine Jones Commandant la fregate des Etats Unis de l’Amerique le Ranger, s’est fait donner par ce Cap^{ne}. une lettre de Change dont vous avéz refusé de faire acquitter le montant. Comme le S. Bersolle se trouve par là, dans l’embarras et que vous sentirez sans doute qu’il est interessant pour la Conservation de votre Credit, qu’il en soit tiré proptement, je suis persuadé que vous ne differerez pas de faire payer non seulement la lettre de Change dont il s’agit, mais encore ce qui est du par le Capitaine Jones, à la Caisse de la Marine à Brest, tant pour les Effets qui lui ont été delivrés des Magazins du Roi, que pour sa Subsistance personnelle et celle de son Equipage.¹

Sur ce qu’il a représenté que les Gens de son Equipage avoient pillé du navire le Chatham, beaucoup d’effets dont une partie consistant en argenterie, avoit été vendue à un Juif, il a été pris des informations au moyen desquelles l’argenterie et d’autres effets ont été retrouvés; mais le tout a été mis en depot, pour y rester, jusqu’a ce que le Capitaine soit en Etat de rembourser ce qui a été payé pour ces effets.²

Je pense au surplus qu’il est à propos que vous soyez informes que ce Capitaine, qui s’est brouillé avec son Etat major et avec tout son Equipage, a fait mettre en Prison, le S^r Simpson son second. Vous jugeréz, peutêtr, à propos de vous procurer les Eclaircissements, necessaires pour scavoir si ce principal Officier s’est mis, dans le Cas de subir une pareille Punition.³ J’ai l’honneur d’être [&c.]

Marly, 6 June 1778

I am informed Gentlemen, that the Sieur Bersolle, after having made very considerable advances to Captain Jones, Commander of Frigate of the United States of America, the Ranger, made this Captain give him a Bill of Exchange, which you have refused to discharge the amount. As the Sieur Bersolle finds himself by this means under Embarrassment, and as you will perceive, no doubt, that it is interesting for the conservation of your Credit, that he be promptly relieved from it, I am persuaded that you will not delay, to cause to be paid not only of the Bill of Exchange in question, but also what is due by Captain Jones to the Treasury of the Marine at Brest, both for those Effects which have been delivered to him, from the Magazines of the King, and for his personal Subsistence, and that of his crew.¹

Upon a representation that the Men of his own Crew had pillaged from the Ship Chatham, many Effects, one part of which consisting of Silver Plate, had been sold to a Jew, Information has been obtained, by which the Plate and other Effects have been discovered; but the whole has been put on deposit, to remain, until the Captain shall be in a Condition to reimburse what has been paid for these Effects.²

I think, moreover, that it is important that you should be informed that this Captain, who has quarreled with his Officers and all his Crew has caused to be committed to Prison, Mr. Simpson, his second in Command. You will perhaps judge it proper, to procure the necessary Information, to know if this principal Officer has merited to suffer such a Punishment.³ I have the honor to be [&c.]

Jones that the seals were to be broken that afternoon and they wanted their agent to be present. The Officers and Men of the Continental Ship of War Ranger to Capt. John Paul Jones, 13 May, NDAR 12: 693. The pillaging must have occurred after the seals were broken. John Adams speculated that Sartine allowed the pillaging to suit his private ends: "The Secret was that the Officers of our own Ships and every Body else, were to be countenanced in violating the Laws and Orders of Congress, in doing the most arbitrary Things of their own heads, without consulting the Commissioners, and in trampling on the most equitable orders of the Commissioners merely to throw the American Business and Profits into the hands of the Tools of the Minister and his Understrappers and to give them Opportunities of Pillage." EARL OF SELKIRK TO CAPTAIN JOHN PAUL JONES, CONTINENTAL NAVY

Dumfries [Scotland] June the 9th. 1778—

The letter you wrote to Lady Selkirk of the 8th of May from Brest,¹ & inclosed to Lord Le Despencer he was so good as to forward, & it came to hand t'other day, as did also its duplicate by common Post. It was matter of surprise both to my Wife & me, as no apology was expected for your landing from your Privateer at St. Mary's Isle on the 23^d of April; but as the letter is polite, & you seem very anxious for an answer, I shall therefore transmit this unsealed to Lord Le Despencer; who as I have the honour to be well acquainted with him, will I hope excuse my giving him this trouble; & his Lordship as Post Master General will judge whether or not it is proper to be forwarded: as a letter to you by common post would certainly be stop'd at the London office.

Your lamenting the necessity of these things in the Profession of Arms; & of being obliged to gratify your officers by permitting them to go to my House & carry off some Plate; & your expressing the great sensibility of your feelings at what your heart cannot approve, are things which we, who have no knowledge of you nor of your character but by report, can form no proper judgement of; but must leave to your own Conscience, & to the Almighty Judge of the real motives of all actions.—You are certainly in the right Sir in saying it was fortunate for Lady Selkirk that I was from home, as you intended to carry me off & detain me Prisoner, for had that happend I dread what might have been its effect on my Wife, then well advanced in her Pregnancy. I own I do not understand how a Man of Sensibility to fine feelings could reconcile this to what his heart approved: especially as the carrying me off could have no possible effect for the purpose you mention; which you say was,—“knowing my Interest with the King, your intention was to detain me, untill through my means a general & fair exchange of Prisoners, as well in Europe as in America had been effected.”—Now Sir nothing can be more erroneous than those Ideas. For I have no Interest whatever with the King; & am scarce known to him, being very seldom at London, scarce six months in whole, during these last one and twenty years. With regard to the Kings Ministers I neither have nor can have any Interest with them, as I have generally disapproved of most of their measures; & in particular of almost their whole conduct in the unhappy & ill-judged American contest. And as to a general exchange of Prisoners being effected through my means; I am altogether at a loss how any man of sense could entertain such an Idea. I am neither a Military nor Ministerial Man, I neither have nor ever had any Government Office, Employment, or Pension nor any Connection with Administration; nor am I in Parliament & except having the disadvantage of a useless Scotch Title, I am in all respects as much a Private Country Gentleman as any one can be: living a retired life in the Country, & engaging in no Factions whatever. How then would it have been possible for such a Man to effect a general exchange of Prisoners? when so many Men of great Power & Influence in both Houses of Parliament have not been able to bring it about.—

You must therefore be sensible on reflection Sir, that you proceeded upon a very improper & mistaken Notion: & that had your attempt succeeded, its only effect would have been to distress a family that never injured any person, & whose wishes have certainly been very friendly to the Constitutional & Just Liberties of America.—You exclaim on the barbarities committed in America, & say they will be retaliated in Britain if not discontinued. I have always been extremely sorry at the accounts of these things: no Man can be a greater enemy to all ungenerous inhumanities in War that I am. God knows best which side began these things, & which has most to account for: but it is certainly the general opinion in Britain, that the Americans began the unusual & cruel practices complained of, & first against their own Country Men who adhered to the British Government.—In your letter you profess yourself a Citizen of the World, & that you have drawn your Sword in support of the Rights of Men; yet you say, you are not in Arms as an American, nor in pursuit of Riches. If you are not in Arms as an American, I do not understand in what character you act: & unless you have an American Commission, I doubt the Laws of the War & of Nations would not be very favourable to you as a Citizen of the World: which however ought to be a very honourable character, & you will do well to endeavour to act up to the humanity & honour of it. Consider then Sir the impropriety & danger to the common Interests & happiness of Society in your departing from the established & usual practices of Modern War. Nothing does more honour to Mankind than the generous humanity & mildness introduced in War of late Ages through all the best civilized parts of Europe; & its violation is always disapproved of, & generally resented by the Ministers of every State: I am therefore persuaded that neither the French Government nor the Congress would have countenanced your carrying me off; nor would have permitted me to be detain'd. Their own Coasts are as much exposed to such enterprises as ours, & they will not wish to introduce such things into the Practice of War as can have no effect upon the great & general operations of it, but would only add to its calamities.—It was certainly fortunate both for Lady Selkirk & me that I was from home: & it was also fortunate for you Sir that your officers & Men behaved well; for had any of my Family suffer'd outrage murder or violence, no quarter of the Globe should have secured you, nor even some of those under whose commission you act from my vengeance.

But Sir I am happy that their wellfare enables me to inform you, that the orders you mention in your letter were punctually obey'd by your two officers & their Men, who in every respect behaved as well as could be expected on such an occasion. All the Men remain'd on the outside of the house, were civil, & did no injury; the two officers alone came within, & behaved with civility: & we were all sorry to hear afterwards that the younger officer in Green Uniform was killed in your engagement with the Drake, for he in particular shew'd so much civility; & so apparent a dislike at the business he was then on, that it is surprising how he should have been one of the proposers of it.—² What you mention is certainly so, that some of the Plate was left; but this was contrary to Lady Selkirks intention & to her orders, but happend partly by accident, confusion, and hurry; & partly by the improper inclinations of some Servants, for which they were severely reprimand'd afterwards. So much was it contrary to Lady Selkirks intention, that she having met a Servant carrying some Plate out of the way, order'd it instantly to be taken back, & given up: & indeed her giving the Inventory along with it, tho not asked for, proves that she meant it all to go: as the Inventory could only serve to shew what she would not have inclined to be known, had she intended or believed any was left: & indeed had your Officers taken time to examine it, they would have got all by means of the Inventory, but the only thing they observed wanting was a Tea pot & Coffee Pot, & on mentioning it the Servant immediately brought them.—This circumstance however proves also what I have pleasure in acknowledging, that your two Officers obey'd your orders in making no search: for which Sir you are intitled to our thanks, & I most willingly give it.—Tho you say nothing improper about what was left; nor can Lady Selkirk be at all thought accountable for it, yet she chooses these things to be mention'd, as she said to your officers, she believed it was all deliver'd; & she now would be sorry if any person whatever should believe her capable of deceit.—The little Plate that was left will seem greater by the Inventory than it is in reality: of the six candlesticks left, two pair are of a very small old fashion'd kind, that belonged to Lady Selkirks Grand Mother, & are not one third of the weight of those now in fashion: the other two are little flat trifles made exceeding small for the purpose of standing in Cabinets for sealing letters: the Tea Spoons & also some spoons of an inferiour make used at the housekeepers table by not being keep in the Butlers Pantry were forgot; together with some other very small things of little value: all the large things left were of the Brimingham plated kind:—

Your genteel offer Sir of returning the Plate is very polite, but at the same time neither Lady Selkirk nor I can think of accepting of it, as you must purchase it you say for that purpose: but if your delicacy makes you unwilling to keep that share of its value which as Captain you are intitled to without purchasing, I would in that case wish that part to be given to those private men who were on the Party; as an encouragement for their good behaviour.—You Sir are intitled to what is more honourable, viz the

There is one thing not so agreeable, as it must put me to considerable inconvenience; it seems the people you sent away from the Ranger after taking the Drake have reported, that you had said,—“you were still determined to take me Prisoner; & would do so within a few months.”

As to my personal danger I have no apprehension about it; but Justice to my Wife & Children makes it necessary to remove myself & family to a more inland situation. Thus your ill judged & useless intentions whilst it can do no good to you, nor be of any service to those in captivity, serves only to deprive my family & me of the pleasure of our Country Residence.—Were there anything in my Power for the procuring an exchange of Prisoners,—God knows I would most willingly do it, for I all along thought the refusing it, both an unjust & impolitic measure; & which I still think will prove useless, & must be departed from.

Tho your letter is wrote like a man who means well, & who wishes to be considered as a man of honour, yet some people in this Country who say they know you, (tho I do not think it is certain that you are the person they mean,) laugh at your saying you are not in pursuit of Riches, & at your intention of taking me for the purpose of procuring a general exchange of Prisoners: they say your design must have been a Ransom, & that your offer of returning the Plate is only a snare to put me off my guard. But as I chanced to be intirely ignorant of you & of your character till your enterprise on the 23^d of April, I have therefore nothing certain to judge by but your behaviour then & since; & as that has in so far as regarded my family been genteel, & tho your intention of taking me was certainly absurd, yet as it was so from mistake, I therefore will not allow myself to think with these people, that a man who professes honourable sentiments, & is acting under an honourable commission for what he thinks is supporting the Rights of Mankind, would for the sake of a pitiful Ransom degrade himself to the low & vile character of a Barbary Pirate: which would be the case, if those people were right in the opinion they give; but I choose to judge more favourably of you, & am Sir [&c.]

CAPTAIN RICHARD PALMES, CONTINENTAL MARINES, TO LIEUTENANT WILLIAM JENNISON, CONTINENTAL MARINES

Copy of Orders given to William Jennison Lieu^t of Marines—June 9. 1778.—

As it is essentially necessary We guard against all possible Apprehensions of Danger, I in future shall expect that the Serjeants & Corporals of Marines be very particular in keeping a vigilant & cautious Watch whenever they have any Centinels under their more immediate Eye, and whenever All hands are called to Quarters, they are to muster all the Marines on the Quarter Deck, there to await further Orders.—

As soon as they are paraded, the Serjeants of each Division, are to apply for the keys of the Arm chest—in order that each man may be supplied with a Gun & Cartridge Box filled with Cartridges, or any other proper Weapon for Defence—

After they are supplied with their Armour, they are to be paraded, & marched to their particular Quarters, there to be kept as closely covered from the Sight of the Enemy as possible—

No one is allowed to speak, but the officers Commanding, or the Serjeants, or in their Absence, the Corporal, are most particularly to see that every man's Gun, & other Accoutrements are in the best order possible.—

If any thing should be wanted, they are immediately to inform the Commanding Officer therewith—

The Serjeants & Corporals are to parade with the Main Body as soon as in Gun Shot of the Enemy—

After an Engagement, or otherwise—Every man is to return his Gun in as good Order as when delivered to him—during the time from being called to Quarters & engaging, every man is to pick Oakum sufficient to clean his Gun—

No man whether Officer or private, is suffered to desert the post assigned him, but in case he attempts to run, or fly from his Colours he is to be shot upon the Spot, wherefore I hope, as the Caution is now given, None will attempt to be in the least disconcerted or disheartened, but Act worthy of the Glorious Cause in which they are Engaged.

Sir,

Passi June 10th. 1778.

We have received your Letter of the fourth instant,¹ and in Answer to it We beg leave to say, that We approve of your Refusal of the twelve hundred Livres to M^r. William Morris, and for the future We expect that you pursue the same Line of Conduct and advance Money to no person whatsoever upon our Account, or in Expectation that We shall repay it, without our express Order.

You are not entitled to pay any Captains Orders or Bills, upon any occasion whatsoever, without our previous Instructions. Goods, not Money, are to be provided for the Captains, and these Goods are to extend no farther than necessary Repairs of their Ships, necessary Victuals for their Companies, and one Suit of Cloaths for each person to be delivered to the Captain or such Officer as he shall direct, to be delivered to the People as they shall want, and charged to the Individuals on the Ships Books that they may be deducted out of their pay.—

As to the prize,² if She should arrive, you will dispose of her, in Concert with Cap^t. Whipple, as you and he shall think best for the Interest of the public & the Captors.

M^r. Monthieu,³ has offered Us the Flammand to go to America upon freight, to carry the Goods which We have now on Hand. We desire You to inform Us, what Freight We ought to give for this Ship that We may know whether it is for the public Interest to hire this Vessel or not.⁴ We have the Honor to be &c

PS. Captain Jones's Expences to and from Paris you will please to pay and charge to the public Account.⁵

To any Captain bound to America
Sir,

Passy June 10th. 1778—

Advices from London of the 5th. of June, mention that the Squadron under Admiral Byron, which sailed from Portsmouth the 20th. of May had put into Plymouth the 27th. and still continued there: And that Orders had been sent down to that Squadron, not to proceed at present to America, as had been intended.¹ Of this you will be pleased to inform those whom it may concern. BENJAMIN FRANKLIN TO CAPTAIN JOHN PAUL JONES, CONTINENTAL NAVY

Dear Sir,

Passy, June 10. 1778

I received yours of the first Inst. with the Papers enclosed, which I have shewn to the other Commissioners, but have not yet had their Opinion of them.¹ I only know that they had before, (in Consideration of the Disposition & Uneasiness of your People) expressed an Inclination to order your Ship directly back to America. You will judge from what follows whether it would not be advisable for you to propose their sending her back with her People & under some other Command. In consequence of the high Opinion the Minister of the Marine² has of your Conduct and Bravery, It is now settled [observe that this is to be a Secret between Us, I being expressly enjoined not to communicate it to any other Person, not even to the other Gentlemen]³ that you are to have the Frigate from Holland, which actually belongs to Government, and will be furnished with as many good French Seamen as you shall require.⁴ But you are to act under Congress Commission. As you may like to have a Number of Americans, and your own are homesick, it is proposed to give you as many as you can engage out of two hundred Prisoners which the Ministry of Britain have at length agreed to give us in Exchange for those you have in your Hands. They propose to make the Exchange at Calais, where they are to bring the Americans. Nothing is wanting to this but a List of yours, containing their Names and Rank; immediately on the Receipt of which an equal Number, are to be prepared and sent in a Ship to that Port, where yours are to meet them. Pray send this List by the Return of the Post if possible.⁵ If by this means you can get a good new Crew, I think it will be best that you are quite free of the old; for a Mixture might introduce the Infection of that Sickness you complain of.⁶ But this may be left to your Discretion.

Perhaps we shall join you with the Providence, Capt. Whipple, a new Continental ship of 30 Guns, which in coming out of the River of Providence gave the two Frigates that were posted to intercept her, each of them so heavy a Dose of her 18 & 12 Pounders, that they had not the Courage, or were not able to pursue her.⁷ The Boston is supposed to be gone from Bordeaux.

It seems to be desired⁸ that you should step up to Versailles (where one⁹ will meet you) in order to [reach] such a settlement of Matters and Plans, with those who have the Direction, as cannot well be done by Letter. I wish it may be convenient to you to do it directly.

The Project of giving you the Command of this Ship, pleases me the more, as it is a probable Opening to the higher Preferment you so justly merit. I have the Honour to be [&c.]

2. The French Minister of the Marine was Gabriel de Sartine.

3. The brackets were in the original. The “other Gentlemen” were Franklin’s fellow commissioners, Arthur Lee and John Adams. The editors of the Franklin Papers have surmised that Franklin’s decision to keep the matter secret from the other commissioners was at the behest of Sartine because the French court distrusted Arthur Lee so much.

4. The frigate was Indien.

5. In their letter to Jones of this date, the Commissioners formally requested a return of the prisoners. DLC, Papers of Robert Morris. Jones responded by instructing his clerk to prepare a list (Jones to James Gooch Jr., 18 June, below). The list of prisoners prepared by Gooch is in the collections of PHI.

6. Jones’s comment about the “homesickness” affecting the crew of Ranger is in his letter to Franklin of June (no day), above, at the beginning of the June European Theater documents.

“EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM ABERDEEN [SCOTLAND], DATED JUNE 11.”

“This morning an American privateer, of about 14 guns and 120 men, appeared in the Bay. The alarm was instantly spread. Mr. Leigh, formerly a Captain in the 64th regiment of foot, and who commanded one of the divisions of the volunteer battalions, marched down to the Castle-hill, from thence he went down to the Beach, and was joined by Mr. Watson, who commands another division. Capt. Mackenzie, with 35 regulars who are quartered in the town, also joined them; in the whole making 235 men. Mr. D. Morice, who commands another division, with Mr. Pocock, remained in the town as a reserve. The Privateer weighed anchor about eight o’clock, and hoisted thirteen stripes; set in for the shore, and fired a gun. They anchored again about three quarters of a mile from the shore, and remained in that position till near nine, when they fired another gun and weighed anchor again, and came within gunshot. In this position they remained another hour without taking notice of any thing; but while the volunteers on the beach were busied in staring about them, they fired such a broadside that made them all tremble. The volunteers lost six men, and 10 wounded. Mr. --- was killed; upon which Capt. Mackenzie took the command, and saluted the rebels with a fine discharge, which killed five men, and wounded two. The firing lasted exactly fifteen minutes; the Aberdeen’s men losing in the whole 20 men killed and 15 wounded. About 11 seeing it in vain to land, the Privateer sheered off. God knows what we shall do, but the dead carcasses frighten the People more than the Privateer. However, we are not afraid of her coming again, as she lost between 30 and 40 killed and wounded.”

GABRIEL DE SARTINE TO THE AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE

A Versailles le 12 juin 1778.

Par votre Lettre du 14. du mois dernier,¹ Messieurs, vous me temoignés craindre qu'on ne mette en liberté les prisonniers qui se trouvent à Bord d'un Batiment que le Capitaine Jones a conduit à Brest. vous fondés vos craintes sur une opinion que les prisonniers d'une Nation avec la quelle La France n'est point en guerre, amenés dans les Ports de France par une autre puissance, ne peuvent pas être detenus par les Capteurs, mais qu'ils sont libres aussitôt qu'ils sont aménés; et vous me demandés mon sentiment à cet égard. il est vrai que des armateurs américains voulant mettre à terre dans nos Ports leurs prisonniers Anglois pour les y detenir, on ne pourroit le permettre, parce que ce seroit de la part de la france, en les y recevant, rompre la neutralité, et faire un acte contraire aux principes du droit des Gens. il est pourroit être de même pour des prisonniers qu'on voudroit detenir à Bord d'un Vaisseau admis dans un de nos Ports; c'est à dire dans un Port interieur: car si c'étoit des Batiments qui se trouvaissent en Rade, ou sous la protection de quelque Batterie, ou dans un Port exterieur, suivant les mêmes principes du droit des Gens, il me paroitrait qu'il n'y auroit dans ce cas de motif à relâcher des prisonniers qui seroient à Bord, qu'autant que les d. Batiments auroient été pris sur les Côtes ou dans les Rivieres de la france. C'est sous le point de vûe de ces differents circonstances que paroitrait devoir être envisagée la question de savoir si des prisonniers d'une Nation avec la quelle la france n'est point a guerre, qui sont amenés dans les Ports de france, peuvent, ou non, y être detenus. J'ai l'honneur d'être [&c.]

Versailles, 12 June 1778

By your letter of the 14th of last month,¹ Gentlemen, you tell me of your fear that the prisoners on board the Ship that Captain Jones brought into Brest will be set free. You base your fear on an opinion that prisoners of a Nation with which France is not at war, brought into the Ports of France by another power, may not be detained by the Captors, but that they are free as soon as they are brought in; and you request my sentiment in this regard. It is true that some American privateer captains want to set on land in our Ports their English prisoners in order to detain them there, this cannot be permitted, since that would be on the part of France, in receiving them, to break its neutrality, and to perform an act contrary to the law of Nations. This would be the same for any prisoners one might want to detain on Board a Ship admitted into one of our ports; that is to say, in an interior Port: for if it were Ships that were in the Roads, or under the protection of a Battery, or in an exterior Port, according to the same principles of the law of Nations, it seems to me that there would be in that case no reason to free any prisoners that were on Board, that as much as the aforementioned Ships would have been taken on the Coasts or in the Rivers of France. It is from the point of view of these different circumstances that one must consider the question of knowing if prisoners of a Nation with which France is not at war, that are brought into the Ports of France, may or may not be detained there. I have the honor to be [&c.]

KING GEORGE III TO THE EARL OF SANDWICH

Kew, 13 June 1778, 40 m. past 6 P.M.

Perhaps from no great expectations of prosperous events in North America, I am rather pleased at the little success obtained by the expedition to destroy the vessels in the Delaware.¹ Had that mode been more adopted during the contest, it must have greatly distressed the rebels and prevented their taking the number of ships with valuable cargoes which enabled them to continue their unjustifiable measures.

I trust our next accounts from Keppel² will be from Cawsand Bay or Torbay.³

Dear Sir

Nantes June 13th 1778—

At parting from Nantes you requested of me if any Men should Offer themselves to send them down to the Frigate. With this Letter you will recieve four Seamen as they tell me, but [I find?] them in debt Francois Leonard 83 Livers & Charles Scott 65 Livres for their board & Lodging, the other two not being there at the time of writing this Letter I cannot inform you what they do owe.

I have been to their Landlady and satisfied her so far that if the Men go on board the Frigate I make no doubt that you will pay the Money but believe she has an inclination to enter likewise as they all go down together.

if any more should offer will do myself the pleasure of recommending Captain Whipple & the Providence Frigate wait for the pleasure of seeing you at Nantes, my Compliments to your Gen Officers unboard though unknown to me & remain with pleasure [&c.]

CHEVALIER DE BEAUDOT DE SAINNEVILLE, LIEUTENANT COMMANDANT, FRENCH NAVY, TO GABRIEL DE SARTINE

Monseigneur

[Brest, Juin 15, 1778]

Pendant mon séjour à Boston le navire français la Brune, Cap^e dufresne, armé à l'orient arriva dans cette baye. Je recommandai au dit Capitaine de prendre toutes les précautions possibles pour éviter la desertion de ses matelots. il me répondit qu'il croyait que le navire quoiqu'expédié sous commission française avait été dès l'orient vendu aux Ameriquains,¹ et qu'il n'attendait pour le remettre que la ratification du conseil du país.² je ne manquai pas d'enjoindre au S^c dufresne de ne pas permettre qu'on arborât à son bord le pavillon américain qu'il ne m'en eût prévenu aussitôt pour que j'eusse le tems d'envoyer auparavant prendre tous les marins français qui composaient son équipage. il me le promit, et comme cette affaire me tenait fort au cœur, dès le lendemain, je lui envoyé un officier pour prendre copie de son rolle d'équipage et lui répéter qu'il me répondrait devant vous, monseigneur, du dernier mousse qui manquerait.

j'attendais de bonne foy la conclusion de cette affaire, lorsque deux jours après on vint m'avertir que le pavillon Ameriquain était à bord de la brune et que plusieurs hommes faissaient Signe qu'on les envoyât chercher. j'expédiai aussitôt ma chaloupe avec un officier qui eut ordre d'aller reclamer l'équipage français. on ne trouva à Bord aucun officier ameriquain, mais seulement anciens officiers du navire ausquels on fit cette sommation de ma part. on ne me rendit d'abord que très peu de matelots. les meilleurs que les ameriquains avaient eû le tems de débaucher s'étaient cachés. j'appris cependant que la veille l'équipage avait été sur le point de se revolter sachant qu'on voulait le livrer au étrangers.

il remit dans ma chaloupe un officier de la brune qui m'apporta une copie traduite de l'acception que le conseil du país faisait de ce vaisseau, annonçant que le commandement en était donné à M. Gréen Capitaine ameriquain. je me plaignis des manœuvres sourdes du Cap^e dufresne et j'insistai pour qu'on me remit la reste de l'équipage.

peu après, le Cap^e dufresne vint à mon bord pour s'excuser sur la maniere dont tout venait de se passer, et me demander conseil sur le parti qu'il avait à prendre pour ce qui était du a ses officiers et à son équipage. je lui fis des reproches sanglants d'avoir manqué tout à la fois à son devoir et à sa parole d'honneur. j'ajoutai qu'ayant accepté lui même l'écrit par lequel le conseil venait de s'attribuer la propriété de son vaisseau il n'en était plus le maître et que le seul devoir qui lui restât à remplir était de faire payer à ses matelots ce qui pouvait leur être dû. je m'offris même de l'aider dans cette démarche, mais cet homme était tellement troublé que je ne le revis plus.

presque tous les matelots de ce navire se sont ensuite rendus successivement à mon bord et volontairement dès qu'il ont su que les américains leur promettaient beaucoup, ne les payaient point, les nourrissaient mal, et les tenaient aux fers pour s'assurer d'eux.

Le lendemain, le Cap^e Green qui était venu de France comme passager sur ce vaisseau, qui à ce que j'ai su depuis avait essayé d'en débaucher tous les matelots et qui avait peut-être compté les conserver de gré ou de force se rendit à mon bord et me témoigna qu'il serait fâché que je crusse qu'il eût voulu engager ces matelots malgré eux, que dans tous les cas possibles si j'eusse voulu les réclamer au conseil, on me les aurait rendus et que cette voie eut, selon lui, mieux convenu que d'envoyer ma chaloupe à bord. je lui répondis qu'une affaire de cette nature ne demandant pas autant d'éclat j'avais cru plus simple—de réclamer directement mes nationaux auprès des personnes chargées du commandement du vaisseau, que n'y ayant trouvé ni capitaine ni individu américain on s'était adressé aux officiers français qui dans ce moment étaient censés dépendre du conseil de la province puisqu'il venait de recevoir et d'exécuter un ordre de sa part. j'ajoutai à cela beaucoup de raisons qui parurent convaincre M. G[reen] de mon esprit de modération et de la nécessité où me mettaient nos ordonnances de me conduire comme je venais de le faire. il parut satisfait, et nous nous quittâmes bons amis.

il n'en est pas moins vrai, monseigneur, que je dois vous demander une justice exemplaire du capitaine Dufresne qui sans égard pour le pavillon du Roi, au mépris de mes recommandations et de sa parole d'honneur a été au moment de m'exposer ou à me compromettre, ou à manquer à mon devoir. il est du département de St^e malo. j'ignore dans quel tems il sera de retour en France ; mais vous en serez facilement instruit si vous desirez de l'être.

en outre des matelots de la brune, j'ai encore ramené onze hommes qui se sont réclamés de moi comme marins.

My Lord

[Brest, June 15, 1778]

During my stay at Boston the French ship Brune, Captain Dufresne, from L'Orient, arrived in that bay. I recommended to the said captain that he take every possible precaution to prevent the desertion of his seamen. He answered that he believed the ship, although sent under a French commission, had already been sold at L'Orient to the Americans,¹ and that he was waiting to return only for the ratification of the council of the country.² I did not fail to enjoin Mr. Dufresne not to permit the American flag to be hoisted on his ship before he had informed me immediately so that I would have time previously to retrieve all the French sailors who made up her crew. This he promised me, and as this affair concerned me greatly, the next day I sent to him an officer to take a copy of his muster roll and he repeated that he would answer to me before you, My Lord, for the last ship's boy who would be missing.

I waited with good faith for the conclusion of this affair, when two days later I was alerted that the American flag was on board the Brune and that several men beckoned that they be sent for. I immediately dispatched my ship's boat with an officer who had orders to reclaim the French crew. No American officer was on board, but only the former officers of the vessel to whom this notice was given on my behalf. There were delivered up to my ship very few of the seamen. The best of them whom the Americans had had the time to seduce had been hidden. I understood, however, that the old crew had been on the point of revolting on learning that they were to be delivered up to the foreigners.

An officer of the Brune returned in my ship's boat who brought me a translated copy of the acceptance that the council of the country made of this ship, declaring that the command had been given to the American captain Mr. Green. I complained of these underhand actions of Captain Dufresne and demanded that the rest of the crew be sent to me.

A little later Captain Dufresne came on board my ship in order to apologize for the manner of all that had taken place, and he asked advice on the course he was to take concerning what was owing to his officers and men. I gave him some biting reproaches for having failed altogether in his duty and his word of honor. I added that he himself having accepted the document by which the council had come into ownership of his ship, he was no longer master of it and the sole duty that remained for him to fulfill was to have the seamen paid what appeared to be due them. I offered to aid him in this proceeding, but this man was so far troubled that I did not see him again.

Almost all the seamen of this vessel subsequently came in succession on board my ship and volunteered since they had learned that the Americans promised much, paid them nothing, fed them poorly, and held them in irons in order to secure them.

The next day Captain Green, who had come from France as a passenger on that ship, who, I learned since, had tried to entice away all the seamen, and who had perhaps intended to keep them willingly or by force from being turned over to my ship, testified to me that he would have been angered that I might have believed he had wanted to engage these sailors against their will, that in any case, I might have reclaimed them in the council, where they would have been turned over to me, and that this way would have been, according to him, more suitable than sending my ship's boat alongside. I responded to him that an affair of this nature did not demand so much uproar, I had thought more simply to reclaim my countrymen, close by, directly from the person to whom they had been entrusted by the commander of this ship, but having found there neither captain nor individual American, we addressed the French officers who at that moment were supposed to depend on the advice of the council of the province, since they had just received and executed an order on its behalf. I added many reasons that appeared to convince Mr. G[reen] of my spirit of moderation and of the necessity of enforcing our ordinances, as I had just done. He appeared satisfied, and we parted good friends.

It is not less true, My Lord, that I ought to ask of you an exemplary justice for Captain Dufresne, who, without regard for the King's flag, in contempt of my advice and of his word of honor, had been at the point of exposing me to either compromising myself or failing in my duty. He is from the department of St. Malo. I do not know when he will return to France; but you will easily be informed of it if you want to be.

In addition to the seamen of the Brune, I have brought back another eleven men who have been reclaimed by me as sailors.

Marine militaire continentale¹

La marine actuelle du Congrès Consiste En quelques frégates Commandées par des officiers gens grossiers Et autant qu'on En peut juger sans instruction Et ils ont dit ils Cinq v^{aux}. de guerre Et six frégates En Construction. Le vaisseau de soixante Et quatorze canons qui Est sur Les chantiers à Boston est à peine boisé. ils n'ont aucun amas de bois, et La rareté des ouvriers jointe au prix excessifs de La main d'œuvre pourra faire qu'il soit pouri avant d'Être achevé. ils n'ont Eu qu'une Seule fois de L'avantage sur Les bâtiments de La marine anglaise. il passe même pour Constant que Le Congrès a donné ordre tant aux armateurs qu'aux frégates Continentales d'Éviter Les v^{aux}. de guerre Et de ne Sattacher qu'à dévaster Ceux du Commerce.

il y avoit trois frégates Continentales à boston qui n'attendoient pour sortir que de pouvoir Compléter Leurs Equipages. ils sont dans la disette de marins par L'énorme quantité de Corsaires qu'ils ont En mer. L'Espoir du brigandage fait qu'on trouve plus facilement des matelots que des soldats.

Abus extrêmement préjudiciables à la marine de France²

Le gouvernement français ne Sçauroit prendre trop de précautions pour s'opposer a L'Emigration des matelots. Les ameriquains Les débea[uchent.] des v^{aux}. du Commerce qui viennent de Leurs ports; ils achètent En france des battiments armés de français sous Le pavillon de notre nation, et ils Les Conservent sous pretexte qu'ils sont Engagés pour 3 ans dans Le v^{au}. sur Le quel ils sont partis de france quoyque Ces matelot ignorent l'achat du battiment qu'on a soin de tenir secret. Les mauvais traitements qu'ils font Essuyer aux matelots français retiennent a bord de Leurs v^{aux}., et Leur Extreme infidelité dans Leurs promesses faciliteront infiniment Les soins que Le gouvernement prendra pour faire Cesser Cet abus quil est de La plus grande importance de réprimer.

Continental Navy¹

The navy of the Congress consists of a few frigates commanded by officers who are men unpolished and as far as I can tell uneducated and they say they have five ships of war and six frigates under construction. The ship of seventy-four guns that is on the stocks at Boston is scarcely timbered. They have no stores of timber, and the scarcity of workers joined to the excessive price of manual labor could result in its rotting before it is finished. They have had the advantage over the ships of the English navy only once. It constantly happens that Congress gives orders to both privateer captains and the Continental frigates to avoid ships of war and only to attempt to destroy those in commerce.

There were three Continental frigates at Boston that awaited only to be able to complete their crews before going out. They are in shortage of sailors because of the enormous number of privateers that they have at sea. The hope of plunder is found more easily among seamen than among soldiers.

Abuse extremely prejudicial to the French navy²

The French government cannot take too many precautions to oppose the emigration of its seamen. The Americans seduce them from the merchant ships that come to their ports; in France they purchase ships fit out by Frenchmen under the flag of our nation, and then retain them under the pretext that they have enlisted for three years in the vessel in which they left France, even though these seamen were unaware of the purchase of the ship, which was carefully kept secret. The ill treatment that they make the French seamen kept on board their vessels undergo, their extreme bad faith in their promises will infinitely facilitate the pains that the government will take to stop this abuse, which is of the greatest importance to repress. . . .

AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE TO GABRIEL DE SARTINE

Sir,

[Passy, June 15, 1778]

We beg leave to inform your Excellency, in Answer to the Complaint of M^r Bersolle,¹ that he had formerly taken the Liberty himself to draw on our Banker for Advances made to Captain Jones before his last Cruise, and was much displeas'd that his Draft was refus'd payment. We acquainted him then with the Reason of this Refusal, viz^t that he had sent us no Accounts of his Disbursements or Advances, by which We might judge whether his Draft was well founded, and he had never any permission to draw on our Banker. However, afterwards, when We had seen his accounts, payment was made to him.

In the present Case, it is said, he has advanced to Captain Jones a thousand Louis, immediately on his arrival, for which the Captain has drawn on Us, in M^r Bersolle's favor: But as Captain Jones had not previously satisfied Us, of the Necessity for this Advance, nor had our permission for the draft, his Bill was also refus'd payment. And as Captain Jones writes Us that upon the News or our Refusal he was reduced to the Necessity, not knowing where to get Victuals for his people,² We conclude that the advance was not actually made, as it was impossible he should in so short a time have spent so large a Sum. And We think it extremely irregular in Merchants to draw Bills before they send their Accounts and in Captains of Ships of War, to draw for any Sums they please, without previous Notice and express permission: and our Captains have the less Excuse for it, as We have ever been ready to furnish them with all the Necessaries they desired, and Captain Jones in particular has had of Us, near an hundred thousand Livres, for such purposes, of which twelve thousand was to be distributed among his people to relieve their Necessities, the only purpose mentioned to Us for which this draft was made, and which We thought sufficient. If this Liberty assumed of drawing on Us, without our Knowledge or Consent is not checked, and We are to be oblig'd to pay such Drafts it will be impossible for Us to regulate our own Contracts and Engagements so as to fulfil them with punctuality, and We might in a little Time become Bankrupts ourselves. If therefore M^r Bersolle has brought himself into any Embarrassments it is not our fault, but his. We are ready to discharge all debts We contract; but We must not permit other people to run Us in debt without our Leave: And We do not conceive it can hurt our Credit if We refuse payment of such debts.³

Whatever is due for necessaries furnished to Captain Jones by the Caisse de la Marine at Brest either from the Magazine, or for the Subsistence of his people, We shall also readily and thankfully pay as soon as We have seen and approve of the Accounts: but We conceive that regularly the Communication of Accounts should always precede demands of payment.

We are much oblig'd by the Care that has been taken to recover the Goods pilaged from the Chatham,⁴ and We think that the Charges that have arisen in that Transaction ought to be paid, and We suppose will be paid, out of the produce of the Sales of that Ship and her Cargo.

We understand Lieut Simpson is confin'd by his Captain for Breach of Orders: He has desired a Tryal which cannot be had here, and therefore at his Request We have directed that he should be sent to America for that purpose.⁵

We shall be oblig'd to your Excellency for your Orders to permit the immediate Sale of the Chatham and other prizes: that the part belonging to the Captors may be paid them, as they are very uneasy at the delay, being distress'd for want of their Money, to purchase Cloathing &c and We wish to have the part belonging to the Congress; out of which to defray the Charges accruing on the Ships. The difficulties our people have heretofore met with in the Sale of prizes, have occasioned them to be sold, often for less than half their Value: and these difficulties not being yet quite removed, are so discouraging that We apprehend it will be thought adviseable to keep our Vessels of War in America, and send no more to cruise on the Coast of England.

We are not acquainted with the Character of Captain Botsen: but if your Excellency should have Occasion for a Pilot, on the Coast of America, and this person on Examination should appear qualified, We shall be glad that he may be found useful in that Quality; and We are thankful to the Consul at Nice for his Readiness to serve our Countrymen.⁶ With the greatest Respect and Esteem We have the Honor to be, your Excellencies &c.

1. On the same day, Whipple wrote Prize Master Nicholas E. Gardner informing him that he had ordered Fletcher to bring Lord Grosvenor to Nantes where Whipple expected "to make more of her here than possibly can down there." He also instructed Gardner to settle accounts, if correct, with the firm of Fairholme & Luther and asked him to assure the prize crew that Whipple was pleased with their behavior. He also wrote Fairholme & Luther to inform them of his decision to move the prize ship "In consequence of Orders this day recd from Paris." Finally, he wrote Jean-Daniel Schweighauser informing him that he was moving the prize in accordance with Schweighauser's wishes, asking him to arrange settlement of accounts with Fairholme & Luther, and requesting a supply of clothing for the "under Officers" of Providence. Whipple would arrange for clothing for the seamen when he visited Nantes on "Thursday," 18 June. All three letters are in the Abraham Whipple Papers, Letter Book, MiU-C.

CONRAD-ALEXANDRE GÉRARD TO VICE-AMIRAL COMTE D'ESTAING

L'incertitude ou l'on est sur la Situation des affaires en Amerique ne permettant pas d'arrêter un plan constant d'operations et de concours réciproque, il paroît néanmoins interessant de chercher à fixer d'avance quelques points généraux, d'après les suppositions les plus probables, et de déterminer par aperçu les demandes que le Commandant de l'Escadre jugera à propos de faire relativement aux différentes expéditions auxquelles les circonstances le détermineront.

Première suposition. Le general howe continue à occuper Philadelphie. Il y a un nombre considerable de vaisseaux de guerre et de transport dans la riviere; une operation prompte peut déterminer le succès.

3^e suposition. L'armée anglaise étant pourvue de vivres, les vaisseaux de l'escadre ne pouvant pas remonter la riviere, et le seul moyen de reduction étant d'empêcher les convois, lequel exigeroit un tems considerable, on se décidera peut être à attaquer New-York, et dans ce cas quel concours demandera-t-on aux Americains?

4^e suposition. Ces deux expéditions étant terminées, ou n'ayant pas lieu; il s'agira de savoir à quelle autre entreprise on voudra se déterminer, soit pour en faire la proposition au Congrès, soit pour l'en recevoir, et quel seroit le secours et le concours à demander aux Etats Unis? En s'eloignant dans le Nord et en sacrifiant un tems précieux à cette expédition, on pourroit peut être demander en compensation une certaine quantité de provisions, assortie à nos besoins, pour les operations de l'Escadre dans les Iles. Cette suposition paroît ne pouvoir regarder que Newport.

5^e Suposition.—Les Anglais ont établi l'armistice de fait en retirant leurs troupes et leurs vaisseaux du territoire des treize Etats Unis, principalement pour fortifier le Canada et halifax et pour faire passer quelques troupes en Angleterre et dans les Iles. Il s'agiroit alors d'attaquer hallifax.

Cette expedition étant d'un interêt majeur, feroit exister le cas prévu par la cour, d'une compensation permanente à donner au Roi.

Quel seroit dans ce cas le concours que les Americains auroient à donner à l'Escadre du Roi, et quelle seroit l'Ile qu'il faudroit demander en compensation?

Observation. Les denrées pouvant être fort cheres, à raison du prix exorbitant de toutes les marchandises, on propose de tacher d'engager le Congrès à se charger de la fourniture des vivres a un prix convenu et moderé qui seroit payé par des assignations sur les lettres de crédit fournies par la Cour. On pourroit aussi tenter de faire régler le prix des rafraichissemens, si le prix en etoit excessif.¹

À bord du Languedoc, le 15. Juin 1778.

Gerard

[Translation]

The incertitude in which one is regarding the situation of affairs in America not permitting settling on a constant plan of operations and of reciprocal cooperation, it appears nevertheless worthwhile to try to fix in advance some general principles for the most probable suppositions, and to determine roughly the requests that the commander of the squadron may judge appropriate to make in reference to the various expeditions to which the circumstances may lead him.

First supposition. General Howe continues to occupy Philadelphia. There are a considerable number of warships and transports in the river; a prompt operation can determine success.

2d supposition. That success being obtained, if one then judges it appropriate to attack New-York, one would be authorized to request not only the necessary cooperation, but even a compensation: what might it be?

3d supposition. The English army being provisioned, the ships of the line of the squadron not being able to ascend the river, and the sole means of reduction being to impede the convoys, which would require considerable time, perhaps one would decide to attack New-York, and in that case what cooperation might we ask of the Americans?

4th supposition. These two expeditions being ended, or not having taken place, it would be a matter of knowing what other undertaking one would choose, be it one proposed to Congress, or one proposed by Congress, and what would be the aids and the cooperation requested from the Americans? In absenting oneself in the North and in sacrificing precious time on this expedition, one could, perhaps, request in compensation a certain quantity of provisions, suited to our needs for the squadron's operations in the islands. This supposition appears to be justified in reference to New-port alone.

5th supposition. The English have established an armistice in order to retire their troops and ships from the territory of the thirteen United States, principally to fortify Canada and Halifax and in order to move troops to England and to the islands. It would then be a matter of attacking Halifax.

This expedition being of major interest, it would produce the case foreseen by the court, of a permanent compensation to give to the king.

What would be in this case the cooperation that the Americans would give to the royal squadron, and which would be the island that it should request in compensation?

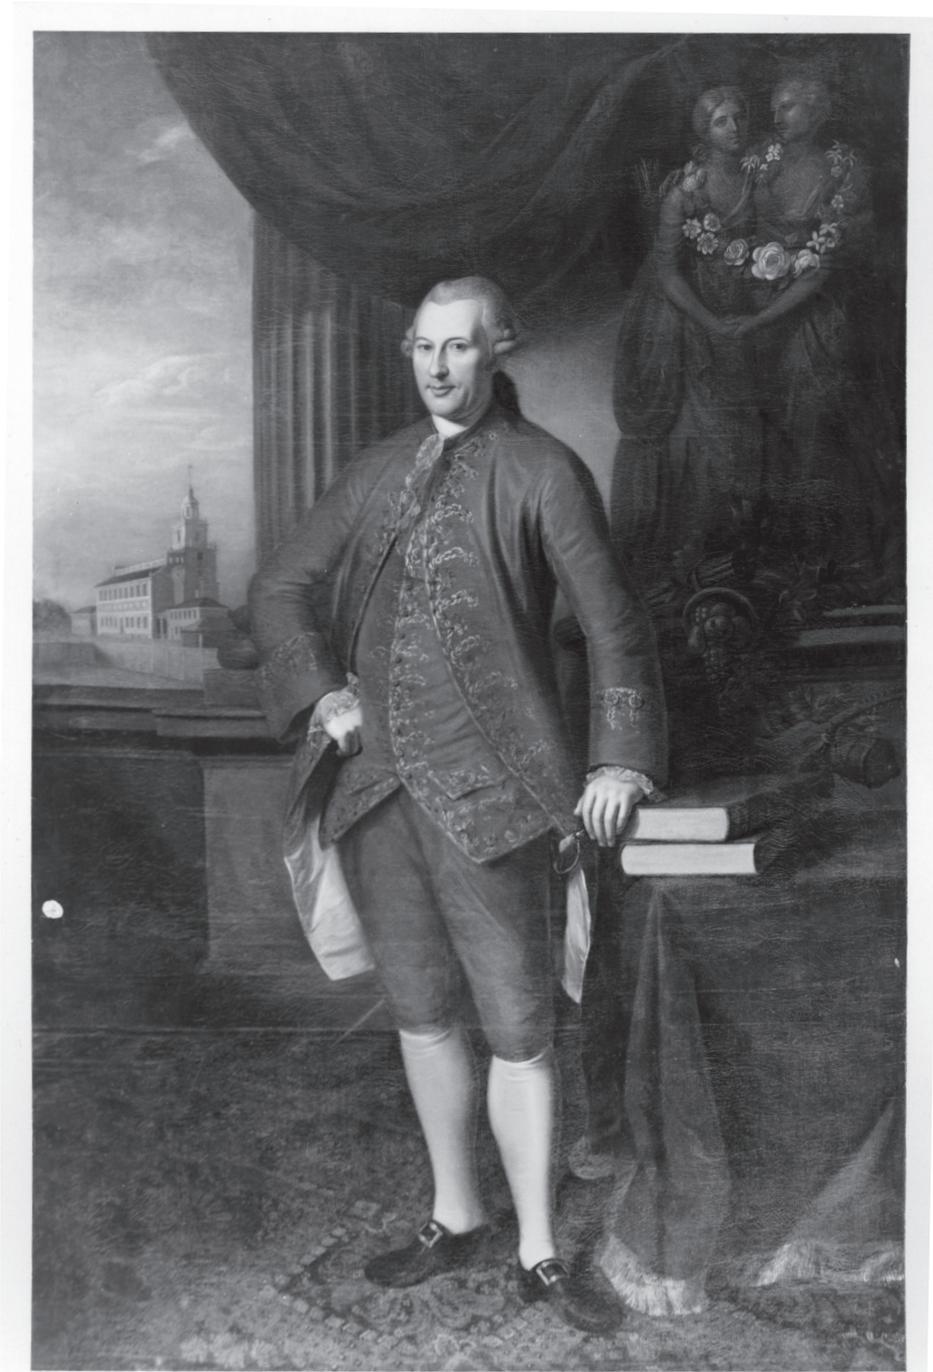

Observation. The provisions may be very dear, because of the exorbitant prize of all merchandise, it is proposed that we try to engage Congress to commit to furnishing victuals at a suitable and moderate price, which would be paid by the assignment of letters of credit furnished by the court. One could also try to have the price of provisions regulated, if their price were excessive.¹

AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE TO CAPTAIN JOHN PAUL JONES, CONTINENTAL NAVY

Sir

Passi June 16th 1778.

Upon Receipt of this Letter, you will forthwith make preparations with all possible dispatch, for a Voyage to America.—¹ Your own prudence, will naturally induce you to keep this your destination, secret, least Measures should be taken by the Enemy to intercept You.

If in the Course of your passage home, Opportunities should present of making prizes or of doing any material Annoyance to the Enemy, you are to embrace them, and you are at Liberty to go out of your Way for so desirable a Purpose.—The Fishery at the Banks of Newfoundland is an important Object, and possibly the Enemys Men of War, may have other Business than the protection of it. Transports are constantly passing and repassing from Rhode Island, New York and Philadelphia to Hallifax and from all these places to England.—You will naturally search for some of these as prizes.

If the French Government should send any dispatches to You, or if you should receive any from Us to carry to America, you will take the best care of them, and especially that they may not fall into improper Hands. You are not however to wait for any dispatches, but to proceed upon your Voyage as soon as you can get ready.

If there is any Room on board your Ship, where you could Store away a Number of Chests of Arms, or of Cloathing for the Use of the United States, you will inform M^r Schweighauser of it, that he may send them to You before your Departure.

We dont mean to incumber you with a Cargo, which shall obstruct the Sailing of your Ship or which shall impede You in fighting her: but if consistent with her sailing and fighting She can take any Quantity of Arms or Cloathing it would be a desirable Object for the public.²

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN TO DAVID HARTLEY

Dear Sir

Passy, near Paris, June 16. 1778.

I receiv'd yours of the 5th Instant, acquainting us that the Ministers have at length agreed to an Exchange of Prisoners. We shall write to Capt Jones, for the List required,¹ which will be sent you as soon as receiv'd. I understand there are at least two hundred. We desire & expect that the Number of ours shall be taken from Forton and Plymouth in Proportion to that Number in each Place, and to consist of those who have been longest in Confinement. It being not only equitable that they should be first reliev'd; but this Method will prevent all Suspicion that you pick out the worst & weakest of our People to give in exchange for your good Ones. If you should think proper to clear your Prisons at once, and give us all our People, we will give you our Solemn Engagement, which we are sure will be punctually executed, to deliver to Lord Howe in America or his Order, a Number of your Sailors equal to the Surplus, as soon as the Agreement arrives there. There is one Thing more which we desire may be observ'd: We shall note in our List the Names & Number of those taken in the Service of the King, distinguishing them from those taken in the Merchant Service; that in the Exchange to be made, you may give ~~equal~~ adequate Numbers of ~~each kind~~ those taken in the Service of the States, & of our Merchants.—This will prevent any Uneasiness among both your Navy men and ours, if the Seamen of Merchant Ships were exchang'd before them.

As it will be very troublesome & expensive, as well as fatiguing to them, to march your People from Brest to Calais, we may endeavour to get leave for your Ship to come to the Road of Brest to receive them there; or else (if that not be) we must desire from your Admiralty a Passport for the Ship that is to convey them from Brest to Calais.

If you have any of our People still Prisoners on board your Ships of War, we request they may be put into the Prisons to take their Chance of Exchange with the rest.² I am [&c.]

JEAN-DANIEL SCHWEIGHAUSER TO CAPTAIN ABRAHAM WHIPPLE, CONTINENTAL NAVY

Sir,

Nantes 16 June 1778

This morning M^r Woodworth your L^t of Marines¹ brought me y^r much esteemed favour of yesterday by which you advise me that you have sent one of your Officers to the Isle of Rhé to bring your Prize into this River,² it is true that it will sell much more Advantageously but the Risk there is from thence to this port required that the Cargo should have been imported in french Casks and the Vessel sold here or there deliverable at S^t Martins. I waited the Commissioners Orders to give my instructions to that purpose and I am sorry Capt Jones has so much misunderstood me if it had been decided that I should have had it as it now is I would have troubled him with a Letter to you to that purport—however as what cant be cured must be endured we must hope for the best and if she Arrives safe some charges will by that means be saved, at all events I write by tomorrows post to Messieurs Fairholm & Luther in order to stop your Officer if he should still be there and follow the plan I mention as the most prudent and the most safe if it meets with your Approbaⁿ: I have according to your Desire bot and delivered your said L^t Cloth for Seven suits of Cloaths with linings amounting together to 394-8 charged to the Ships account I have Orders likewise to Furnish the Slops & Provisions for your Crew therefore beg that you would freely Command and believe me most truly sir [&c.]

Rev^d. Sir

As there is no Justice of Peace in this place you'll please advice the nearest Custom House of the following Information. That being loaded with Provisions for New York, I sail'd from the Fairly Road on the 14 Curr^t and beating out Channel with a Contrary Wind the length of the Mull of Kintyre; on the 16th. I and the Ships Crew observed two Vessels one a large Ship and the other a Brig^e: at 3 Leagues distance bearing down upon Us which We at first apprehended to be Merchant Ships home bound—on a nearer survey, they having altered their Sails, and standing close in Channel till we alter'd our Course, on which they immediately altered their's We then suspected they were American Privateers, and stood in nigh the Craig of Aisla² for Six Hours, we attempted going out a Second time but found the Ships in the same Station, from this We concluded they were Enemies waiting for Ships in the Mouth of the Channel³ upon which we directly bore [away] for the Harbour of Lamblash in Arran for Our own Safety and likewise to give the earliest Information to the Public I am &

FRANCIS COFFYN TO THE AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE

Hon^d. Gentlemen,

I take the liberty to crave your referrence to the letter I had the honnor of writing to you the 8 ins^t. to the contents of which I am Still waiting with anxiety the favour of your answer.¹ I received last night only under a blank cover your letter dated 10th. ins^t. address'd to any Captain bound to America² the contents of which shall be carefully communicated and recommended to two Captains which are now fitting out their vessells in this harbour for Said destination, that they may inform those whom it may concern on their arrival at any port of the Continent. interim I think it proper to advise you, that the first will sail in about 8 or 10 days and the last will not be able to proceed before the 5th of next month: as they intend to go north about Scotland, and I imagine the american Coast will be pretty clear of Cruizers against the time they may reach it, it is to be hoped they will get there Safe; if your opinion should coincide with mine and you Should think proper to convey by the same channell any interesting news you may receive relating the dispositions of the fleets on the other Side, you may rely on my particular care and attention to your orders in this, as well as in every other respect.

The intelligence received by last post from London and by the Smugglar respecting these fleets, were So contradictory, that I did not think it prudent to communicate it to you; Some letters mention'd that both Squadrons were Sail'd from Portsmouth and Plymouth, and others advised that they was Still detain'd by contrary winds the 9th ins^t but that the Ships were then riding at Single anchor, the last account was confirm'd by a person who left London last Sunday.

whereas on account of our vicinity with England, it often happens that we have the news here, Sooner then they can reach the place of your abode, if I should hear any of importance in which confidence may be placed, before the departure of the above mention'd two vessells, I will if you approve of it, transmit the intelligence by the Same channell.

The Captains of three vessells two of which arrived here yesterday and one this morning, report that on monday last, they met off Portland close to the shore, a fleet of about 45. Sail, steering westward, that some of the Ships which appear'd to be 60 large men of warr, fired guns, and that the Salute was return'd from the Shore.³

one of the american Seamen which I mention'd in my last was gone off in a Smuggling vessell is return'd, and he Seems to repent that he had taken that Step without acquainting me off it, he is desirous of going on board of any continental ship of warr or privateer, he is a Stout able Seaman he was onboard the fox frigate when She was retaken.⁴

Three other americans which have been out on a whaling voyage in the South Seas, arrived here yesterday, they are also desirous of Serving their Country, and therefor claim your protection; I humbly give it as my opinion that it is necessary to provide for these people, for if they are not immediately employ'd, I am afraid they will return to England where they are sure of meeting encouragement because the British Gouvernment is taking every step to Establish that fishery in England, and in order to Succeed therein offer great advantages to all Seamen who are Expert in it; if once it takes root there, it may be hurtfull to america, as this fishery has hetherto been a considerable branch of Trade in the New England provinces: I therefor take the liberty to request you would favour me with your orders respecting the above mention'd four men, and if contrary to my opinion your intention is that they shift for themselves, I beg you would inform me of it as the first has not a Shilling left, and the three last have hardly money enough to maintain them 'till I can receive your answer.

James Bearns being now nearly recover'd of the wound he received on board the Lexington,⁵ I have agreed with a Captain of the Brigⁿ. la Boulonnoise bound to Brest to allow him £72 — for his passage and provisions on the voyage, which I shall pay tomorrow and the moment I'll receive your orders to settle with the two Surgeons, I shall remit you this mans bill.⁶ with great respect [&c.]

[18 June 1778, Blaye, France]

My Lord

My Lord Doctor Franklin

My Lord

Etienne Rousseaux Lacombe, citizen and merchant of the city of Blaye, Province of Guienne, humbly petitions you by saying: that being blessed with six children and but little means, he took particular pains to inspire them with the sentiments of probity and religion, which distinguish an honest man; that the warlike spirit of Jean Rousseaux, his second son, made him prefer service at sea from his earliest youth; that after several voyages to the French colonies as a volunteer, he begged permission of the petitioner to go to Boston in order to offer to the defenders of liberty all the resources which courage can inspire. The petitioner, informed by the public papers of the noble efforts in behalf of liberty which the United States of America were making against the most revolting bondage, stifled his natural feelings and sacrificed his son to his veneration for the Franklins, the Laurenses, and the Washingtons. It was under these happy auspices that Jean Rousseaux, the son of the petitioner, embarked on the 11th of May 1777 in the brigantine Lexington, equipped by the Congress with 16 cannons, 12 swivel guns, and a crew of 84 men, commanded by Captain Henry Johnston, in the capacity of lieutenant with pay at the rate of seventy livres per month and a share in the prizes.¹ They were at Nantes. From there they set their course for the Straits of Gibraltar with two other ships² of the Congress. Below Cape Ortegal the Foudroyant royalist ship forced them to change their route. Then they formed the plan to lay siege to some towns on the coast of Ireland, but, having encountered a number of English merchant vessels, they attacked them and captured seventeen of them.³ Jean Rousseaux distinguished himself in these actions by a show of courage uncommon at his age. He was made captain of a vessel of two hundred tons laden with sugar and coffee returning from St. Domingue, which he had captured himself on the 15th of June 1777, and which he took to Morlaix to be sold there. The Lexington, having been chased by a English frigate of 40 cannons,⁴ also took refuge at Morlaix, and after she had been careened she set her course for Boston,⁵ having on board Jean Rousseaux, the son of the petitioner. On the 19th of September 1777 they were engaged by Captain John Bazely, English commander, fought with him, and after two fierce engagements in which bravery several times almost turned the tide of victory in favor of the Lexington, overwhelmed by numbers and pierced on all sides, she surrendered and was taken to Dover, the prisoners to Plymouth Dockyard.⁶ Such, Your Lordship, are the adventures of a young man who ought to interest Your Grace by reason of the devotion which he as shown to your country. He wrote to me begging me to please send him funds that would alleviate the hardships of his captivity. He informs me that he received only two hundred livres as his share of all the prizes that had been taken. He hopes for justice on the part of the Office established by the Congress for the distribution to each one of the proceeds of these sales, so that he will receive through me these funds, which are to recompense an unfortunate father and to alleviate the sufferings of an unhappy son. To whom could I apply, Your Lordship, who could render justice to me with greater success, than to the man whom all France admires, and to whom America owes her independence, and whose name will be graven forever in the heart of every man who can appreciate liberty. Mr. de Béllot, gentleman, Knight of St. Louis, mayor of this city, in certifying to Your Grace the truth of my petition legalized by the Royal Judge, will have the kindness to present it to you and to take all the steps which Your Grace may suggest for obtaining the funds to which my unhappy son is entitled by reason of his courage. Your noble and compassionate soul will be favorably disposed towards an unhappy father who laments the absence, the suffering, and perhaps the death of his son. For such acts of justice Heaven will preserve a life as precious to America as that of Your Grace, and in spreading the spirit of wisdom against the tyrants who wish to enslave her, she will owe to Your Grace the spirit of wisdom that will make her triumph over their vain efforts and will make her commendable in both hemispheres. Such is the wish that will always be cherished, Your Lordship, by Your Grace's Most humble and obedient servant, Etienne Rousseaux Lacombe.

We, Pierre OLanyer, King's Councillor, Civil and Criminal Judge and Lieutenant of the City and Royal Provost of Blaye, certify that Mr. Etienne Rousseaux Lacombe is a citizen living under the jurisdiction of this city, and that the said Jean Rousseaux's younger son, is now a prisoner at Plymouth, England, that this is the customary signature of the said Etienne Rousseaux Lacombe, by whom there is affixed at the foot of the present petition this memoir, and faith is to be given to it both for this judgment and for other purposes. Done at Blaye in our Town Hall on the eighteenth day of June one thousand seven hundred and seventy-eight.

a Versailles le 20 juin 1778.

J'ai reçu, Monsieur, une Lettre de Nantes qui m'été ecrite par le S^r. J. W. Schweighausér, agent d'Etats unis de L'amérique septentrionale, qui comme chargé de la Direction des prises faites et conduites à Brest par les fregates Le Ranger et La Providence, me demande les formalités à observer pour la vente des d. prises. je lui réponds qu'elle peut être faite soit à Bord soit à terre, à l'amiable; mais qu'il ne doit être question d'aucune des formalités qui s'observent en général pour des prises. je préviens les officiers de l'amirauté de Brest de ce que je lui marque à ce sujet; et je vous en fait part, étant à propos que vous en ay connoissance. j'ai l'honneur d'être [&c.]

I have received, Sir, a letter from Nantes written to me by Mr. J. W. Schweighauser,¹ agent of the United States of North America, who, being entrusted with the disposition of the prizes taken and brought into Brest by the frigates Ranger and Providence, asks me the formalities to be observed for the sale of the prizes. I am answering him that the sale can be done on board or on shore, by private contract; but that it should only be a matter of the formalities that are observed in general for prizes. I am alerting the officers of the admiralty of Brest of what I am telling him on this subject; and I am informing you of it, it being appropriate that you have knowledge of it. I have the honor to be [&c.]

The Chevalier de la Forest brought on board the Providence Frigate ten Men, of which eight remain on board the others were desirous to go back again to Nantes to pay some debts they owe, I paid them nothing but I have advanced to the eight others fifteen Livres a piece—promising them fifteen Livres more when the Ship will return in her moorings, be so kind as to send another mast as soon as possible I have been twice a day to the Carpenter to entreat him to work with all the expedition possible, there is one piece of Oak Timber put into the mast and two others ready the Lieutenant Pitcher¹ has got the Top Mast painted today theres a Ballast boat along side now the Carpenter has told your Officers that he has not got an answer yet whether he shall hew a Top Mast here, if it is possible get a thousand livres from M^r Schweighauser² for the Butcher the Chevalier tells me he has about thirteen men & shall be able to get twenty more but he thinks it very advisable not to bring them on board, untill the Ship is ready to Sail and I think it would make a great noise & they might be claimed by superior Orders the Gentleman has paid for their Victuals at

[Mill Prison, Plymouth, June 1778]

21. Sunday. Notwithstanding our friend's advice,¹ we have a plan in agitation for making our escape, and are resolved to go on with it. Our design is to get into a drain at the corner of the yard, where the last hole was found out, and dig up on the other side of the wall. For this purpose, yesterday afternoon three men took down a piece of wall under a window, in an old prison adjoining this drain. These men got into the prison and the wall was put up again, and plastered up with dirt. They dug into the drain and tarried there all night and till after we were let out in the morning, when we let them out. Last night, when we were counted into prison, three boys went in first and got out at the window, and were counted twice, to make up the number.

I take this Oppertunity of Acquainting you that on the 16^h instant I arrived here and was in high spirits that I should get away next Day but unfortunately found that the Brig would not float to high Springs there not being 7 feet water in the Dock¹ therefore to make all the Dispatch that was in my power got a bark along side and took out 28 Pipes in Order to lighten her just as we were going to heave her out of the Dock, M^r Luther recieved a Letter from the Agent at Nantes² for to stop the Brig by all means & not to let her go without further Orders, as he wrote that you sent for the Vessel without his knowledge therefore M^r Luther insisted that the Brig should not go out of the Dock untill it was determined by you and the Agent what should be done, I have been to Rochelle along with M^r Luther to see what the Wine could fetch by the Pipe and to know whether the Vessel must be Condemned by the Court of Admiralty in Case the Vessel and Cargoe should be sold here but got no Satisfactory Accompt about it³ please to send me Orders as soon as possible that I may know in what manner I must conduct myself M^r Gardner joins me in Compliments to you and all the Officers on board this from [&c.]

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN TO ALL COMMANDERS OF ARMED VESSELS BELONGING TO THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

To all Commanders of armed Vessels belonging to the United States of America
Gentlemen

Whereas the Religious Society commonly called the Moravian Brethren, have established a Mission on the Northern Part of the Labradore Coast for the good purpose of civilising & converting to Christianity the Barbarians who live there,¹ and by that means put an End to their Custom of plundering and murdering the People of our Fishing Vessels and others passing in those Seas. And whereas those Missionaries and their Families depend for Subsistence in that unfertile Country on the Supplies annually sent them, and on the Friendship of the Natives, which is maintain'd by little Presents of Iron Ware, all furnished by charitable Subscriptions in England; the Interruption of which Supplies might hazard the Loss of those pious Missionaries, and ruin an Enterprize beneficial to Humanity. I do therefore hereby certify, that the Sloop Good Intent, burthen about 75 Tons, Capt. Francis Mugford, carrying in the present Voyage about 5000 Bricks for building Chimneys with Provisions & Necessaries for the Missionaries and their Assistants, and some Ironmongery and Tin Ware for the Indians; The Crew consisting of the Captain, Mate, three Men & a Boy; and the Passengers One Man and three Women; is the Vessel employ'd in the above Service for the present Year. And I request if the said Vessel should be met with by any of you that you would not consider her as a Merchant man, proper to be made a Prize of, but rather concur benevolently in promoting so good a Design, by permitting her to pass freely, and affording her any Assistance which the Casualties of the Sea may have rendered necessary, in which I am persuaded your Conduct will be approved not only in your own Breasts, but by the Congress, by your Owners, and by all Mankind. Wishing you all Success and Prosperity, I have the Honour to be [&c.]

VICE-AMIRAL COMTE D'ESTAING'S RESPONSES TO CONRAD-ALEXANDRE GÉRARD'S SUPPOSITIONS

Réponses aux suppositions de M. Gérard.¹

La variété des circonstances maritimes et militaires rendent incertains les projets les plus probables; les bases les mieux établies ne sont que trop souvent renversées par un événement imprévu; si les données elles-mêmes se trouvent n'être que des spéculations douteuses le problème n'est plus que chimérique, on nage dans le doute; mais on cause, et causer c'est chercher à se connaître, c'est beaucoup: deux hommes attelés à la même besogne s'en devinent mieux; mettre cependant trop de confiance dans un aperçu toujours susceptible d'une multitude de variantes ce serait s'égarer; on aperçoit de loin des ressemblances de position qui disparaissent lorsqu'on est proche et l'on doit être prevenu d'avance que les inductions tirées de ce qui va être dit seront très fréquemment contrariées par la loi toujours impérative du moment.

reponce à la supposition numro un. la promptitude est la première des armes, ettonner c'est presque avoir vaincu: c'est ce qui est desirable; c'est ce qui sera peut-être: on fera très assurément l'impossible pour y parvenir. surprendre le lord et l'amiral Howe par une opération mixte aussi compliquée que celle de remonter d'abord environ vingt deux lieues et ensuite environ treize lieues d'une rivière c'est se flatter que des vents, des marées différentes, des sondes, des manœuvres, celles de l'ennemi tout concoureront à une promptitude qu'un rien peut ralentir. si nous étions instruit de ce que nous ignorons des circonstances, si nous avions dans nous même des secours qu'il faudrait chercher ailleurs, des pilotes, si les éléments et les positions nous étaient également favorables, il nous resterait encore à établir un concours nécessaire entre les forces de terre des Américains et l'escadre sans cette unité d'action nos succès dans une rivière ne seraient que momentanés ils pourraient devenir dangereux. Le roman qu'on se plairait à adopter, celui qui jetterait le plus de certitude sur l'avenir de la campagne serait de trouver à la mer les forces navales des ennemis: la supériorité acquise par un combat accélérerait, faciliterait, elle influencerait d'une manière prépondérante. Il ne resterait plus qu'un genre de calcul celui des défenses terrestres et de la possibilité des attaques on n'aurait plus à prévoir que la chance éloignée des secours imprévus que l'Angleterre peut envoyer inopinément ils deviendront dangereux en raison de ce qu'ils trouveront sur les lieux et de ce qui pourra agir avec eux. Vaincre à l'atterrage est donc ce qui est à souhaiter de même qu'après le malheur d'une paix, d'une trêve signée ou d'une escadre fort supérieure ce qu'on croit le plus défavorable serait de ne trouver que la plus petite partie des vaisseaux de guerre Anglais avant que de s'enfoncer dans la Delaware. L'épisode d'un désir et d'un soupir est pardonnable elle suffit voilà une seconde préface; imaginons supposons et racontons: les fictions deviennent rarement une réalité; n'importe nous prenons connaissance de terre entre le cap Henry et le cap Hinlopen on aurait cherché sans hasarder la certitude de l'atterrage à ne se laisser apercevoir que le plus près qu'il aurait été possible de ce dernier: des bâtiments américains ou Anglais, plus parfaitement mauvais voiliers que nos frégates, ou très hardis auront été joints, nous serons instruits et si ce qu'ils auront dit est conforme au texte de la supposition si ce premier bonheur a lieu il sera la source de tous les autres, si les embarcations rencontrées ont échappé si une seule l'a fait si aucune n'a paru, ce sera à l'extrême promptitude à réparer ces inconvénients ou l'ignorance informé ou doutant de tout on est enfin par le travers du cap hinlopen il faut alors avant de dépasser indian river et reho bay se décider a envoyer une frégate plus ou moins soutenue pour visiter un lieu qu'on dit être le dépost des prises faites par les anglais, on le designe aussi comme un des deux endroits ou l'on pourrat trouver des pilottes. le soutien de cette frégate exigera des reflexions il faudrat qu'elles soyent courttes le parti qu'on prendrat serat nécessairement hasardé tout dépost peut et doit être bien gardé bien defendu bien choisi Les gros vaisseaux aprocheront ils de tère? la fregatte même pourrat elle le faire? des chaloupes suffront elles? ne seront elles pas absolument compromises; deux ou trois vaisseaux fourniront ils asses de monde? et leur separation quelque courtte qu'elle soit ne deviendrait elle pas une faultte majeure? tout retard de la part de la totalité de l'escadre n'en paraitroit elle pas une plus grande? On présume que la croisiere sans doute a l'ancre des vaisseaux de guèrre anglais doit être Nord Est et Sud ouest entre le cap james et le cap may c'est la surtout où il faut ariver avant d'être attendu par le fort ou evité par le faible: ne serat ce que lorsqu'on y serat parvenu que ce ferat le detachement d'indian river? les vents les courants le permettront ils encore? et le depost ne serait il point échapé? il est probable qu'il faudrat mouiller sur son champ de bataille, evenement rare a la mer: un second détachement d'une frégate serat necessaire au même instant elle ne devrat point laisser tomber son ancre pour être plus tost a portée d'envoyer sa chaloupe a terre ou Pilot town; le nom de cette ville promet, mats tiendrat il parole une simple chaloupe de frégate ne pourroit elle pas au lieu de ramener des pilottes être arestée? il est infiniment a craindre qu'une flotte anglaise navigant sans cesse dans la de la War toute son embouchure ne soit ou Royaliste ou tres assujétie.

Les pilotes sont a bord le detachement d'indian river se rallie les vents et la marée favorisent on n'a perdu que douze heures moins s'il est possible ; il a fallu que pendant ce peu de temps le ministre plénipotentiaire du Roy et l'envoye de l'Amérique² ayent scu ou est le congres si les communications sont rares, leur parti doit être pris et eux débarqués avec leurs gens et ce qu'ils voudront de leurs effets ou leur sejour a bord peut se prolonger plus qu'ils ne le voudront ce débarquement est cependant une chose d'importance premiere non seulement pour le personel interessant de M^s Gerard et Dean mais aussi pour la chose générale l'extremse importance de remonter vite si le parti est pris de le faire dominera les considérations les plus imposantes il faudrat avoir combiné décidé et exécutté ou le débarquement serat remis. ne serat il pas utile dans tous les cas que des duplicata de lettres en chiffres pour le congres et pour le Général Washington soyent remises aux fregattes d'indian river et de pilot town[?] ces depesches a mediter a preparer d'avance a se comuniquer devront être nécessairement en chiffres M^r Dean peut seul en avoir un et les écrire; at il ce chiffre? ce quelles contiendront déciderat peutetre du sort de toute la campagne: remonter le plus haut possible s'emboquer, attaquer, demander en reponce l'indication de l'instant: ne faire que bloquer, affamer, [laisser entre ?] pendant combien de temps on pourat le faire; interoger sur ce que M^r Washington croit qu'il en faudrat consommer dans ce rosle passif et plus redoutable que l'action ouvrir l'idée d'une diversion sur New York presenter ce que le general américain desireroit que l'escadre fit sur le champ en cas d'une retraite du Lord Howe par les jerseys voila les quatres points principaux de ces importantes épîtres elles sont indispensables mais seront elles possibles[?] la correspondance du gouvernement de l'amérique est dit on plus qu'au bercau et tres vitieuse dussent elles être inutiles ces lettres leur preparation ne scauroit être trop prochaine n'y trop reflechie de pareils en cas sont majeurs et décisifs j'ose espérer qu'on aurat le bonheur de les employer et M^r Washington est trop homme de guêrre pour ne pas répondre nettement et promptement il sentirat et il serat convenable de lui faire insinuer que la possibilité d'aujourd'hui peut echapper demain.

Les depesches en chiffres sont parties l'escadre est sous voile le main ship channel nous a conduit avec un brasseyage que les carttes annonce suffisant jusque Nord et sud de Bombay island et de Stow creek. le mouillage de Reedy island est celui que l'inspection des carttes et que ce qu'on a entendu dire font croire le meilleur on voudroit pouvoir le suposer l'endroit de la seconde station mais avant de s'y rendre on ne trouve plus que quatre brasses anglaises, c'est a dire un fonds de 22 pieds six pouces francais on peut sans doute s'alléger mais laisser un mur entre la mer et soy est il prudent? on a pu, on n'a pas craint de le faire on est mouillé a Reedy island y attendrat on la reponce du general Washington[?] y parviendrat elle[?] combien faudrat il y sejourner[?] descendrat on tout de suite jusqu'a billings fort moins inquietant parce quil parait qu'on peut s'y embosser de tout pres que le fort red Bank couvert d'un banc qui en eloigne et qui otteroit par la aux vaisseaux toute la superiorite qu'ils ne doivent qu'a la proximite des batteries qu'ils attaquent. L'isle aux quatre redouttes et sans nom³ qu'on voit sur la cartte, environ au Nord Ouest quart de Nord de Red bank est aparament celle ou les anglais n'on pu parvenir suivant les relations qu'en allegeant des vaisseaux de cinquante canons combien ne faudrait il donc pas diminuer le tirant d'eau des notres. puisse la force des vents et du courant permettre de le faire sans trop hasarder une stabilité soumise au calcul des poids puisse l'attaque de M^r Washington etre soutenue par la notre et par la terrible diversion de notre artillerie puisse les vaisseaux nouriciers et de transport etre détruits jusque sous philadelphie même puissions nous y marquer les logements du Congres et repartir pour New york avant meme qu'il soit arrive et puisse tous ces veux ne pas etre totalement batis sur les brouillards de la de la War.

reponce a la suposition numéro deux. le premier concours est celui du fonds. les carttes ne font voir que trois fathoms and half non seulement sur la bare continue resserée par les deux bancs de coney island et de false hook mais encore dans le petit passage formé entre ce second banc et celui qui tient a Sandy hook 19 neuf pieds huit pouces trois lignes mesure française sont le produit de trois brasses et demies anglaises les marées des mortes eaux que la cartte de la de la War spécifie tandis que celle de la riviere d'HUDSON se tait sur cet objet important ne sont que de quatre pieds et demi Anglais qui vallent 4 pieds 2 pouces 9 lignes francais ce total ne donnerait donc a la mer haute que 23 pieds 11 pouces le tirant d'eau du Languedoc est de 22 pieds six pouces celui du Tonnant est de 23 pieds 10 pouces et tous les vaisseaux de 74 de l'escadre tirent de 21 a 22 pieds d'eau eux seuls peuvent avoir quelque superiorité sur le nombre des vaisseaux de 64 et de cinquante qu'ont les anglais la levée d'une embouchure de riviere ou la mer du large est resserée par des bancs n'est plus celle de l'intérieur de la de la War seise pouces d'eau audessous de soy n'y sont pas sufisament rassurants: la stabilité du navire est bien plus aisement compromise en embouquant que dans un chenal enfoncé dans les têtes.

on est passé. les vents apres avoir permis de mettre le cap a l'ouest ont laissé raportter au Nord au Nord Est, les Narrows sont déjà loin et l'affaire Nautique est terminée il est demandé par la chose militaire quel est le concour de terre que les Ameriquains devront fournir. Le décider le presumer même est impossible et seroit ridicule avant de se douter seulement de ce que l'on aurat a combattre. le plus de moyens sera toujours le meilleur l'infanterie anglaise est bonne excellente elle a vu abandonner a son aproche les forts independance et Washington⁴ il est a craindre que si elle les a repris une seconde fois ce qui est plus que possible elle ne les cede pas aussi aisement la foule pourat l'étonner une attaque environante qui laisseroit ces forts derriere qui les négligeroit s'ils ont été repris, la mer dont nous serions maitres choses contre nature pour des têtes anglaises nos vaisseaux qui tonneroient contre new york une descente des américains dans long island du gros canon de l'escadre des mortiers etablis par eux et avec notre secours sur la pointe du brook land, l'isle du gouverneur enlevée, occupée par nos troupes, ses batteries tournées contre la ville qu'elles deffendaient un ensemble d'operations rapides pourat ébranler la fermete ordinaire des troupes britanniques mais il paroît nécessaire en stipulant un concours de ne point oublier qu'il doit etre plus que proportionné que les troupes du Nord et surtout celles de Boston sont les plus acoutumées à voir les anglais de pres et que le moindre acte de foiblesse ou de timidité rejetant tout le poids de l'action sur nous pouroit être très funeste: une pertte inutile en hommes en aparaux ou en munitions dont le port de Toulon a ete si cruellement avare seroit trop et notre inaction subsequente deviendrait aussi nuisible aux Américains qu'a nous même le mouvement de la machine militaire entrainerat peutetre trop vitte la circonspection politique le ministre du Roy serat peut etre obligé de presser la demande des compensations et d'exiger dans le meme instant les reponces les plus cathegorique tout enfant qu'est le gouvernement ameriquain il aurat deja ses finesses et toute republique a des lenteurs et fort peu de secret le Canada apartiendrait au Congres s'il avait dans les comencements scu promptement et suffisamment secondér le general Arnold: il faudrat donc vaincre l'adresse presser sans choquer pousser l'incertitude aprendre a ne pas mettre son vray sure ses malles et subjuguier vivement des volontes diverses et des interets peut etre oposés le chef deuvere en serat plus grand il est digne de celui qui a quitté pour l'entreprendre le gouvernail intérieur du cabinet de Versailles si l'on croyait soumettre des idées mal ou trop peu digerées a son experience et a ses lumieres on diroit que les premiers mots politiques qu'il prononcerat doivent être sacramentaux qu'il aplanirat bien des difficultes et qu'il s'évittera a lui meme beaucoup d'épines si la premiere conference regle pour préliminaires invariables compensation d'efforts mutuels dans toute l'amerique en general possession garantie et comode pour la pêche sans rien designer et tous genres de facilité d'entretien pour l'escadre libératrice. les numeros suivants ebauchent un peu cet aperçu informe reponce au numero trois. ce qui a été établi dans l'article precedent se trouve renfermer ce que le present article exige Le concours des Américains doit etre non seulement calculé sur ce que New york aurat de deffenseurs mais sur la quantité de temps qu'il faudroit pour que les secours de philadelphie pussent y arriver une diversion qui n'est que cela, qui n'a point la reussitte pour objet n'est qu'un moyen trop secondaire il consomme du temps, l'effet est douteux l'attaque reeslle est la seule diversion admissible le succes la produit il devient deux fois utile il l'est par ce qu'on a fait et par ce qu'on a empeche [de faire] mais tatter sans frapper et seulement pour distraire serait selon mon opinion dans le comencement et avec des Anglais le plus pernecieux de tous les parttis, songer au peu de temps que la saison nous laisse pour operer le prouve nos enemis m'ont fait jadis l'honneur trop grand de craindre un peu mon activité c'est une illusion préteuse il faut s'il est possible

reponce au numero quatre. je crois aux secours de vivres de provinces méridionales, je compte sur ceux de Boston, mais je crains de manquer des rafraichissements les plus ordinaires et les plus utiles pendant le temps que nous serons dans la de la War et dans la rivière d'HUDSON ces auberges la ont été trop frequentées on y vit depuis trop longtemps a discrétion l'engorgement de denrées de la partie du Sud pourat sans doute les faire promptement refluer sur nous, il est probable que la cote une fois purgée des croiseurs anglais les ameriquains se serviront de leurs embarcations s'il leur en reste mais la Marine Anglaise est ponctuelle et opiniatre il n'est pas demontré que ces officiers aussi exacts qu'ils sont patients et intelligents l'eventront les stations qui leur sont assignées des qu'ils me scauront au dessous d'eux ils pouroient fort bien en conclure au contraire que le dessein de l'escadre n'est pas de remonter qu'ils sont en sureté et qu'ils doivent restter ou on leur a ordonné d'être ; il faudroit pour les en chasser avec certitude, atterir au sud et ranger la costte cela retarderoit peu et les canaux seroient indubitablement debouchs mais on auroit sonné le tocsin et c'est la le pis de tout les dilemmes militaires ont trop souvent l'inconvenient douloureux d'avoir des branches qui se croisent qui se nuisent entre elles et en elagant celle qui paroît la moins importante on perd quelque fois la plus productive on pense cependant qu'il ne faut pas mettre l'accessoire en concurence avec le principal. les bruits répandus par ordre du congres d'une expedition dans le sud des preparatifs ordonnés pour nous y recevoir magasins qui ne seroient pas perdus puisqu'ils pouroient ensuite nous parvenir par mer une manœuvre feinte qui si le vent le permettait ne consommerait que deux ou trois jours et qui nous feroit voir de terre porttant ou nous ne voudrions pas aller petit moyen qui peut reunir le double avantage de tromper egallement l'endroit ou l'on vat et celui qu'on ne veut que delivrer le dernier parti enfin toujours fort dangereux d'un détachement des vaisseaux de l'escadre pendant que le surplus s'occuperoit de l'attaque de new port forme l'enumeration⁵ des choses a faire et a discuter si les stations Anglaises du sud conservent toute la tenacité qu'un avantage marqué et d'eclat leur otteroit elles conserveront la vraisemblablement si les bruits publiques ne les ebranlent pas.

se faire proposer ce qu'on desire appartient trop a la politique pour s'apesantir en parlant a un aussi grand maitre dans l'art diplomatique sur l'utilité d'un procedé de premier principe. si l'on n'executtait rien de plus important que New port il faudroit bien au moins faire cela et ce moins pourrait etre beaucoup les aparaux de la Marine Anglaise y seront peutetre déposés New port peut etre devenu le point milieu des forces navalles l'Amiral Howe le regardoit comme le plus comode puisque c'est de la qu'il a voullu faire partir le general Burgoine⁶ C'est encore sur cet objet comme sur tous les autres d'apres ce que l'endroit attaque renfermerat et d'apres ce qui le deffendrat qu'il faudrat solliciter et regler le concours si l'on n'a rien fait et s'il est possible de se passer totalement du secours des troupes des provinces unies reserver leur bonne volonte et leurs moyens pour la derniere operation donneroit le droit d'exiger alors davantage et de demander un plus grand equivalent en vivres des pratiques surs, des intelligences avec les gens du pays avec les citoyens de Newport, des gens de confiance qui ayent la leur; seront un concours necessaire partout et on pense qu'on pourrat et qu'il faudrat promptement l'obtenir pour ce lieu comme pour les autres l'enseigne de la liberté porté par des mains Amériquaines et marchant devant les armes du Roy peut devenir l'arche du Seigneur et faire tomber les murailles⁷ on a besoin d'un prodige lorsqu'il faut lacher de faire autant de choses en aussi peu de temps: un assortiment de vivres pour les operations de l'escadre dans les isles serait un équivalent d'autant plus grand que ne pas les affamer qu'y portter ou y convoyer des comestibles pour leur propre consomation s'est travailler a leur bonheur comme a leur déffence, et qu'apres le succes de l'entreprise l'economie dans les depences de l'escadre est ce qu'il y a de plus desirable

reponce au numéro cinq. l'armistice de fait semble si rapproché de celle de droit et toute convention tacitement agreee ou signee sans la France paraitrait desormais si contraire aux interets du Roy que cette idée seule fait fremir hattons nous sans nier une suposition possible de passer a celle de l'attaque d'halifax. plus les états unis considereront cette operation comme etant d'un interest majeur et plus la compensation prevue par la cour pourrat etre considerable plus elle serat facile a obtenir on pence que les secours que les ameriquains donneront en troupes et en embarcations pour les portter doivent etre fort exageres et infiniment au dessus du besoin reeslle par une infinité de motifs en spécifier quelques uns ferat embrasser d'un seul point de veu tous les autres: la saison avancée forcerat de brusquer halifax si l'on perd encore beaucoup d'instantans au service du Congres pour lequel on aurat tout fait gratuitement il n'en resterat plus pour celui de sa Majesté l'hiver n'attend pas il chasse ou il faut le passer ou l'on se trouve ce qui serait affreux et nous rendrait nuls pour six mois: il ne faudrat plus dans l'arriere saison penser a remonter vers le sud ce serat du nord qu'on devrat faire routte pour les isles du Vent: les états laisseront sans doute une forte garnison a halifax elle diminuera ce qui operera avec nous et pour nous: ce mot ramenne a la désignation de l'isle elle exige une épisode: mes instructions sans etre exclusives noment l'isle de S^t jean: le Ministre plenipotentiaire du Roy d'apres ce qu'il m'a dit panche pour terre neuve c'est le foyer de la pêsche; l'isle de s^t jean n'est que fertile les matelots sont la denree qu'il nous faut la morue les fait pousser s^t jean est petite l'Espagne toujours possedee de la manie teritoriale ne peut avoir une grande part que sur un large territoire si le compas ne s'ouvre point sur la cartte elle croirat qu'on ne lui offre rien je pense totalement comme M^r Gerard mais je suis servile en fait d'instructions je voudrais qu'il fut possible de satisfaire tout voici mon chateau en Espagne un système pour etre parfaitement bon doit etre général et ne faire qu'un celui de l'Amerique est la liberté que tère Neuve la conserve qu'elle envoie aussi s'il se peut, au congres que sa ville de plaisance dans la quelle il y a seise mille ames ou que sa ville de s^t jean dont les anglais ont fait le chef lieu soient aussi souverains que Boston mais qu'attendu l'importance dont il est pour l'amerique comme pour l'europa que les anglais ne redeviennent pas pecheurs uniques l'isle de terre neuve uatorsieme province ou unie a une des treise, soit sous la speciale protection de la France que l'Espagne puisse y acceder, que l'une et l'autre couronne possedent en souveraineté de grandes portions de l'isle actuellement peu établies comme la Plage des Trépassés,⁸ ou ce cap sufisament designé dans le traité d'Utrecht et que la mauvaise foy anglaise n'a jamais voullu qu'on nommat le cap riche⁹ que les parties de l'est on de louest et cetera soient partagées que les trois puissances se garantissent la pesche exclusive en specifiant, pour evitter toutes contestations sur toutes les costtes de terre neuve et que le droit d'échafaut sera reservé et resseré au territoire de chacun que la France et l'espagne aussi dans le cas ou tel est son plaisir, veillent a la surete de l'isle en general par des troupes a elles, par des subsides meme accordes a la province ameriquaine de terre neuve pour l'entretien perpetuel de troupes reglées d'officiers d'ingenieurs d'artillerie et de fortification affin que cet important joyau maritime ne puisse jamais par aucun cote retomber entre les mains de l'enemi comun que ces subsides, que la preponderance qu'ils donneront dans le gouvernement dans celui de t re Neuve forme un chainon un lien de plus entre nous et le congres et qu'enfin les etats unis cedent et garantissent au Roy la souverainete de la petite isle de s'Jean beaucoup moins utile pour la pesche que pour pr parer consommer et assurer la revolution ou la conquestte du Canada et par consequent etant plus avantageuse dans les mains de la France aux etats unis qui veulent ou cette revolution ou cette conquette du Canada qu'a nous memes qui n'y songeons pas et qui ne trouverions dans l'isle de s'Jean par sa culture actuelle et par la bonte de son sol que des moyens comestibles pour soutenir nos nouveaux etablissemens de terre neuve: que cette isle de S' Jean en devenant sujette du Roy ne perde rien des droits que l'angleterre a voullu enlever a l'amerique qu'au contraire ils y soyent porttes au plus haut degre qu'ils y soyent consacres s'il se peut de maniere a rendre impossible   tout ministre et ce qui est cent fois pis   tout chef de burau aveugle a tout gouverneur despote d'en troubler l'organisation que les am ricains y voyent sans cesse sous leurs yeux un exemple absolument opose aux erreurs Anglaises que quelques uns d'entre eux viennent y chercher la veritable libert  d'action de discours et la tranquillite que l'inquietude la jalousie et l'ingratitude et tous les petits chocs du gouvernement republicain font plutost perdre que trouver sous le bonnet un peu chimerique d'une pretendue libert  parfois tres ideale et souv nt reine plus soucieuse que ne l'est sa Majeste l'authocratrice de toutes les Russies telle est la chimere que je croirois infiniment utile de voir r aliser comme elle ressemble fort a la fable du pot au lait¹⁰ Helas apres tous mes que qui seront trop probablement des que retranches j'ai au moins le droit de dire tout au milieu de mon songe, comme la petite laiti re il me semble deja que je vois tout cela

Des Apotres envoy es le plus tost possible a Plaisance a s'jean de terre neuve et a l'isle de s'jean m me sont un des plus grands moyens de r aliser ce resve il faudrait que la mission eut deja  t  bien et solidement presch e lorsque l'escadre irait lever les scrupules plus il y auroit d'Americains avec nous et plus notre evangile deviendroit plausible le bon choix, le nombre de ceux qui le soutiendront l'acceleration de leur depart l'aplanissement des difficult s les instructions ou tout serat prevu des bases bien donn es ce seront la les grands services que le Ministre pl nipotentiaire du Roi rendra a sa Majeste cest ce qui m'a fait dire dans le comit  que du choix de celui qui accepterait cette difficile commission dependait davantage la reussite que de la nomination du G n ral: si mon rabachage sur cet article a d cid  le voyage de M^r Gerard je me f liciterai d'avoir  t  v ritablement utile a la chose; M^r Gerard sentirat mieux que personne l'importance des moyens ocultes. Ils seront au moins aussi fructueux que les ostenssibles; les premiers seront les siens, tout l'honneur lui en apartiendrat; il partagerat aussi la gloire des troupes Am ricaines qui nous seconderont ou les lui devrat.

ce qu'il m'a fait l'honneur de me dire au sujet de la Bermude m'a engag    r flechir profondement sur cet objet: ce n'est point la conversation que j'ai eue il y a un an avec M^{re} le C^{te} Daranda¹¹ qui m'a fait marquer de l'eloignement pour y convoquer une flotille americaine les raisonnemens de M^r l'ambassadeur d'Espagne ne m'avoient point alors persuad  aujourdui que la roue a pris tout son mouvement peutetre que M^r d'Aranda ne penseroit plus de m me c'est l'embarras Nautique de ne pouvoir mouiller aux Bermudes de ne faire que croiser dans un parage fertile en coups de vents ou en calmes d' tre oblig  de m'en eloigner tout a coup et d'y laisser des gens qui ne manqueroient pas de croire qu'on les abandonne c'est le temps beaucoup trop long qu'ils voudroient peutetre consommer a consolider leur revolution cest celui que je perdrais qui me feroit balancer. Je certifie que les raisons politiques ou que le fort médiocre derangement de la routte ne m'inquieteront point dans une operation a la quelle je consentirai si M^r. le Ministre Plenipotentiaire continue a la croire aussi bonne elle me paroît tout bien examiné, elle etre avantageuse, soit pour la sureté de notre comerce soit pour infestter a jamais celui des anglais elle doit etre adoptée si M^r. Deane a conservé de loin ce que ses confreres dans la revolution ont perdu en restant sur les lieux leur crédit et leur place au congres et si notre pelerinage aux bermudes donne des facilités dans les négociations et un moyen de plus pour obtenir davantage de secours contre terre neuve contre l'isle de s' jean et s'il se pouvoit contre la barbade je trouverai peutêtre necessaire d'attaquer cette derniere isle avant que l'on ne me scache aux isles du vent et si je suis parfaitement instruit des forces maritimes je me deciderai probablement a ne relascher a la Martinique qu'apres avoir comencé a agir contre ce qui est le plus auvent parce que remonter contre lui est trop long et parceque surprendre vaut plus que quatre batailles qu'un vaisseau de ligne et que trois fregattes d'augmentation. si l'operation des Bermudes procurait l'assurance d'un grand Convoy de vivres pour nos isles. cette certitude me paroitroit suffisante pour faire risquer les inconvenients d'un coup de vent douteux, et du triste role de spectateur non agissant. les batiments chargés d'objets a vendre pourraient l'etre aussi de soldats a débarquer mais il faudrait absolument que toutes les embarcations marchassent comme nos mauvais voiliers ce qui n'est pas pretendre a une grande vitesse.

nous serons donc dans le cas satisfaisant d'operer meme aux isles du vent sous l'influence politique du caducée de M^r. Gerard il partagerat d'autant plus nos succes qu'il nous aurat augmente nos moyens ceux du second ordre ne seront pas les moins intéressans on comprend, sous ce titre les bons pilottes les carttes les plans dettaillés soit pour l'executtion d'un projet soit pour la conaissance des lieux une demi douzaine d'emissaires ou satellittes hardis intrigants les nouvelles et un achat de dix ou douze negres esclaves qu'on affranchiroit dont l'employ projette exige une spécification un peu moins tronquée que celle des autres objets mes instructions me prescrivent avec la plus grande raison de ne conserver que la Dominique expédition qui ne se ferait qu'en sortant du fort Royal. tout ce qui m'est d'ailleurs prescrit d'attaquer doit être abandonné il m'est ordonné de faire le plus de mal possible au comerce Anglais: donner la liberté a tous les negres qui voudront me joindre avant la prise ou la reddition de chaque lieu serat sans contredit une perte irréparable pour l'angleterre c'est otter tout a la fois a l'agriculteur ses bestiaux et au manufacturier ses ouvriers; remettre sous le fouet d'un comandeur des esclaves une fois déchaînes est difficile laborieux et quelquefois impossible les negres devenus libres que j'aurais armés ou que j'aurais laisse s'armer ceux que je n'enleverois pas en qualite de soldats formeroient sur les lieux et apres mon depart un levain de rebellion infiniment incommodé le sucre s'en ressentiroit longtemps et s'ils avaient quelqu'un pour les conduire ils embarrasseraient autant les isles du vent anglaises que les negres des montagnes bleues¹² ont tourmenté les Colons de la jamayque s'ils avaient été dans le temps secretement animés et armés, les anglais etaient chassés ou toutes leurs plantations detruites pour longtemps mes émissaires blancs et noirs seroient employés des l'instant du débarquement a repandre dans les habitations le desir et la certitude de la liberté il faut pour cela des gens qui parlent anglais les noirs seront plus tost crus par ceux de leur couleur que les blancs mais quelques uns de ces derniers seront necessaires pour conduire la machine et pour etre au besoin les espions des autres le choix de ces divers instruments me semble infiniment important c'est tout dire ce qui l'est dans les affaires majeures ne paraitrait je l'espère jamais indigne de ceux qui sont depuis longtemps acoutumés a diriger les grandes entreprises par tous les ressorts qui les font jouer a l'egard de l'argent, il ne peut selon mon opinion y en avoir de mieux employé. il m'est prescrit dans mes instructions de laisser la nouvelle colonie du nord et celle de la Dominique a l'abri de toute insulte J'employerai pour l'execution d'un ordre aussi difficile j'implorerai pour toutes les deux isles du septentrion et du [midi] la meme divinité la liberté les nègres et soldats soutenus et contenus par ce que je pourrai tirer des garnisons de la Martinique et de la Guadeloupe et par ce que je laisserai moi même sont le moyen unique que je puis avoir pour rendre la Dominique difficile a reprendre: ce moyen est bon: je l'ai éprouvé c'est principalement par le secours de negres rendus libres faits soldats et devenus matelots que j'ai réussi dans mon expedition de [l'Inde]¹³; ils y ont donnée des preuves de courage de fidelité et de discipline qui ont effacé de mon esprit tous les prejugués contraires l'expérience m'a démontré la verité de deux principes le 1^{er} c'est que tout ce qui s'apelle homme quand il passe dans un etat meilleur et qu'on l'y contient qu'on l'y occupe et qu'on lui inspire l'emulation peut etre conduit et animé le second est que si l'on se battait dans le feu il faudroit tacher d'y employer des salamandres¹⁴ les tropiques sont l'element des negres et presque partout le poison des blancs.

je n'ignore pas que ce qui est selon mon opinion sans inconvenient reesle n'y marqué pour la Dominique reconquise rencontrerait ailleurs des obstacles presque insurmontables je scai que tout colon de S^t Domingue et de la Martinique regarde un negre armé comme un monstre prest a le devorer et a venger ses [semblables.] ces Colons abuses voyent cependant sous leurs yeux ce qu'ils ont pu remarquer comme moy c'est que les negres libres sont ceux qui traitent les esclaves avec le plus de rigueur ils en sont les plus cruels et les plus mortels enemis. j'ai surveille arrestte et puni leur barbarie pendant trois ans¹⁵ je prévois que les riches Abitants diront que les Anglais s'ils prennent S^t Domingue ou la Martinique feront la meme chose que moy et qu'ils les ruineront en affranchissant une partie de leurs esclaves il n'y auroit pas grand mal quand cette crainte salutaire et peu fondée augmenteroit dans les cœurs le desir de se bien deffendre nos concitoyens d'amerique ordinairement plus spirituels que profonds en donneroient une nouvelle preuve par ce raisonnement les Anglais aiment trop ce qui raporte pour gatter ainsi leur gibier nos enemis croiront trop longtemps encore a leur superiorité maritime pour ne pas esperer de conserver ce qu'ils auront pris au lieu de diminuer le nombre de negres travaillants ils l'augmenteront c'est ce qu'ils ont fait a la Guadeloupe et a la Martinique pendant qu'ils l'ont eu leur système seroit encore le meme le mien est celui du moment c'est uniquement celui des lieux qu'on abandonne et celui de la Dominique petite islle sans moyens actuels de deffence et qu'on veut conserver: je ne pretends pas attendre mon projet plus loin il ne blesse point le droit de la guèrre ni des gens si les negres ne sont que bestiaux les armées dans tous les pays se servent des chevaux et des bœufs elles les enlèvent si ces hommes noirs sont des payisans ceux de la Saxe ont été très malgré eux créés soldats Prussiens je ne projette que de faire des recrues volontaires ou de recompencer ceux qui auront été utiles aux troupes du Roy: les raisons legales et celles de l'interest present ou avenir vu dans le plus grand éloignement militent donc en faveur de mon systeme mais, au lieu d'un aperçu je fais un mémoire pour le soutenir; il est temps de retourner a nos moutons.

Reponce a l'observation. tous les comestibles toutes les denrées seront infiniment cheres c'est aussi mon opinion cent mille raisons me le persuadent. on dit qu'on ne s'est pas plu a Paris a conseiller ou a faire faire de fort bons marches aux ameriquains il faut s'attendre a pis et toutes représailles a part les dévastations le papier monoye nos lettres de credit qui ne vaudront tout au plus que ce papier qui ne sont que des assignations sur quelqu'un qui doit et le taux sans doute exorbitant des marchandises rendront le trop grand nombre de nos besoins non seulement tres ruineux mais fort difficiles a obtenir c'est ce qui me fait desirer ce que le peu de marche de nos frégattes nous a empeche et nous empechera d'avoir, une prise chargée de choses qui manque aux ameriquains et il leur en manque beaucoup. Je pense que dans leur position, comme dans la nôttré ce ne sont que par les échanges faits entre des objets mutuellement nécessaires que les magasins s'ouvrent et que les marchandises peuvent être ramenées a un taux raisonnable. rien sans doute ne seroit plus utile que d'engager le congres a se charger de la fourniture des vivres a un prix convenu et moderé mais il faudroit en le faisant qu'il demeurat bien convaincu de toute l'importance dont il est pour lui même de ne pas promettre ce qu'il ne tiendrait point. a l'égard des rafraichissemens locaux la police peut a paris taxer les denrées et ce qui est plus difficile forcer a les vendre mais dans un pays qui est le théâtre de la guérre dans une republique toute neuve dont tous les fibres ne sont pas encore bien correspondants n'y a leur place cet ordre au lieu d'être utile éloigneroit peut être les vendeurs. une exhortation bien patetique produiroit peutêtre davantage le congrès y diroit que ce sont les liberateurs des cotes ceux qui vont faire renaitre la navigation et labondance les Amis enfin de la patrie qu'il faut secourir faire subsister et ne pas éloigner par des prix excéssifs, telle est mon opinion je la soumets a celle de M^r. Gerard. M^r le Chevalier de Borda¹⁶ travaille a un etat de vivres fort detaillé. son esprit d'ordre son zèle et ses talens promettent qu'il ne laissera rien a desirer je me contenterai d'observer d'avance qu'il sera convenable de tenter de remplacer par les choses possibles celles qui ne le seront pas comme par exemple des salaisons par de la viande ou du poisson boucané s'il y en at: tous genres de légumes conserves et surtout le choux croutte si on en peut faire seront de grands antiscorbutiques: les fours de Boston pourraient des les l^{ers} instants faire du biscuit il nous seroit envoyé a Newport; les briques pour construire un second four a bord de chaque vaisseau me paraissent la premiere chose a demander pour la partie des vivres comme six Diabes ou triqueballes seront la premiere chose que la partie militaire exigera et cela peutêtre même pour l'expédition de New york et de New port ils seroient indispensables pour halifax Chaque triqueballe consiste dans deux roues du plus grand diametre de la plus grande largeur de jenttes et force de rayes qu'on peut trouver ayant un essieu assez fort en bois ou en fer pour soutenir un canon de vingt-quatre qu'on suspend par dessous une fleche ou timon sert a tirer C'est ainsi que les pieces de vingt-quatre de fer ont été mises facilement en batterie aux sièges de Madrats et du fort S' David¹⁷ si ces triqueballes pouvaient être au nombre de douse cela n'en serait que mieux il faudroit aussi de quoy faire des chariots composes pour mettre les munitions a couvert et pour les voitures et [illeg.] ce que a été¹⁸ oublié ou refusé à Toulon et de la poudre sans balles ne tue pas même des cailles L'etat de ces trois objets sera dressé et donné particulièrement

Responses to the Suppositions of M. Gérard¹

The variety of maritime and military circumstances render uncertain the most probable projects; the best established foundations are only too often reversed by an unforeseen event; if the informations themselves are found to be only dubious speculations, the problem is nothing more than chimerical, one floats in doubt; but one discusses, and to discuss is to seek to know yourself, it is much; two men applying themselves to the same work understand it better; to place, however, too much confidence in an appearance always susceptible to a multitude of variants would be to be led into error; one perceives from afar some appearances of the position that disappear when one gets closer, and we should be warned in advance that the conclusions drawn from what is going to be said will very frequently be contradicted by the always imperative law of the moment.

Response to supposition number one.— Speed is the first of weapons; to surprise is almost always to have vanquished: this is what is desirable; this is what may perhaps be; one may very assuredly do the impossible to attain it. Surprising Lord and Admiral Howe by a mixed operation as complicated as that of ascending some twenty-two leagues at first and then about thirteen leagues up a river, this requires that the winds, the tides, the soundings, our maneuvers and those of the enemy will all conform to expectations and allow a momentum that nothing can slow. If we were informed of those circumstances about which we are at present ignorant; if we could provide that assistance—such as pilots—that we must seek elsewhere, if the elements and circumstances proved favorable, it would still remain for us to establish a necessary cooperation between the American land forces and the squadron. Without that unity of action, our success in the river would be fleeting; circumstances could become dangerous. The fiction that one would very much like to assume, which would cast the most certitude on the future of the campaign, would be to find the naval forces of the enemy at sea: Superiority acquired by an engagement would hasten, facilitate, and influence events in a preponderant manner. There would remain no more than a kind of calculation, that of land defenses and the possibility of attack. We would only have to plan for the remote chance of unexpected reinforcements from England. They might become dangerous by reason of what they will find in places and what could be done with them. To vanquish on making landfall is what is to be desired, in the same way as that, aside from encountering a peace, a signed truce, or a much superior enemy squadron, the most unfavorable event would be to find only a handful of the English warships before entering into the Delaware. The episode of a desire and a sigh is pardonable; it suffices. There is a second proposition that we might imagine, suppose, and discuss, though fictions rarely become reality; it does not matter if we make ourselves acquainted with the land between Cape Henry and Cape Henlopen. One might be found without hazarding a landing through the following manner: American or English ships, slower than our frigates, or very daring, will be encountered; from them we may garner information that, if it conforms to what we believe, if this first fortunate event takes place, it will be the source of all the others; however, if the small boats we encounter escape, even just one, or if we find none, it will require extreme speed to make up for these inconveniences or ignorance. Informed, or doubting everything, we arrive at Cape Henlopen. It is necessary then, before passing the Indian River and Rehoboth Bay, to send a frigate more or less supported to visit a place said to be the depot of prizes made by the English. It is also said to be one of two places where one can find pilots. Supporting this frigate demands some brief reflections; the route they take will be necessarily risky. Every depot should and must be well guarded, well fortified, well chosen. The ships of the line, do they seek to land? the frigate itself, could it do so? some ship's boats, will they suffice? will they not be absolutely compromised; will two or three ships of the line furnish enough men? and their separation, no matter how brief, would it not become a major mistake? every delay on the part of the whole squadron, would it not loom like a larger one? One presumes that the cruising ground of the English warships, without doubt lying at anchor, must be northeast and southeast between Cape James and Cape May. It is there, above all, that we must arrive before being expected by the strong or evaded by the weak: will it be only when we have arrived there that we will send a detachment for Indian River? the winds and the currents, will they allow it still? and the depot, would it not have escaped? it is probable that it will be necessary to anchor in order to fight, an occurrence rare at sea: sending off a second frigate at the same time will be necessary; it must not drop anchor in order to be sooner capable of sending its ship's boat ashore at Pilot Town; the name of this town promises, but will it fulfill its promise? Could a single frigate's boat, instead of bringing back pilots, be taken? it is infinitely to be feared, because if an English fleet is patrolling the Delaware, the river's entire mouth may be royalist or very much under subjection.

The pilots are on board. The Indian River detachment is rejoined. The winds and the sea are favorable. We have lost only twelve hours, less possibly. It is necessary that during this short interval the King's minister plenipotentiary and the American envoy² learn where Congress is; and, if they meet with encouragement, their route must be chosen and they must be landed with their people and arrangements made for their belongings, or their stay on board may last longer than they would desire. The landing is a matter of the first importance, not only for Messrs. Gérard and Deane personally, but also for the general cause: it is vitally important to travel quickly, for if the party is taken en route, it will impose daunting considerations. It will have been necessary to have made plans, decided, and implemented where the landing would take place. Will it not be useful in any case that duplicates of the letters in cipher intended for the Congress and for General Washington be given to the frigates intended for Indian River and Pilot Town? these dispatches, which should be thought out and prepared in advance, must be in cipher. Only Mr. Deane can possess the necessary cipher and can write the letters; does he have this cipher? the contents of his letters will perhaps decide the destiny of the entire campaign. If we are to ascend as high as possible, to bring broadside to bear, to attack, demands information be sent immediately; or are we only to blockade, to starve the enemy, for as long as possible; to consult with Mr. Washington on whether he thinks we must stay in this passive role, more dreadful than action. Broach the idea of a diversion against New York. Ask what the American general desires the squadron to do first in the case of a retreat by General Howe through the Jerseys: those are the four principal points these important letters must address. They are indispensable, but will they be possible? the correspondence of the government of America is, it is said, more than in its infancy and very vicious. These letters might have been useless, their preparation cannot be too soon or too well considered. Similar ones in case are major and decisive. I dare to hope that we shall have the chance to employ them and Mr. Washington is too much the man of war not to respond clearly and promptly. He will sense and it will be appropriate to insinuate to him that today's possibility can disappear tomorrow.

The dispatches in cipher are sent. The squadron is under sail. The main ship channel is, according to the charts sufficiently deep until north and south of Bombay Island and Stow Creek. The anchorage at Reedy Island is the one that is best based on an inspection of the charts and what has been said. We would like to assume it would be the site of the second station, but before going there, we must consider that it is no more than four English fathoms, that is to say, a depth of 22 French feet six inches. We can undoubtedly lighten ship, but is it prudent to leave a barrier between the sea and ourselves? we have been able, we have not feared doing it; we have anchored at Reedy Island, should we wait for General Washington's answer? would it arrive? how long must we stay there? shall we descend immediately to Billingsport, less troubling because it appears that our broadsides can command the river bank as opposed to near Fort Red Bank where the bank prevents ships from anchoring close, thus negating the advantage of the ships of the line to the batteries that they attack. The unnamed island³ with the four batteries that one sees on the chart, northwest one quarter north of Red Bank, is apparently the one that the English were able to reach, according to accounts, only by lightening their fifty-gun ships. How much, then, must we reduce the draft of our ships. Could the winds and the current permit doing so without hazarding too much stability subject to the calculation of burden; could an attack by Mr. Washington be sustained by ours, and by the terrible diversion of our artillery; could the victualers and transports be destroyed though they are just below Philadelphia; could we reserve there lodgings for Congress and set out again for New York even before Congress arrives in the city, and would all these plans be built entirely on the fogs of the Delaware?

Response to supposition number two. The first item of assistance would be information about the depth of the river. The charts show only three and a half fathoms not only over the bar stretching continuously between Coney Island and False Hook, but also in the small passage formed between False Hook and Sandy Hook. 19 feet eight inches three lines, French measure, are the equivalent of three and a half English fathoms. The tides at still water—which the Delaware chart specifies, are not given on the charts of the Hudson River—those tides are only four and a half English fathoms, which equate to 4 feet 2 inches 9 lines French. This would yield only a high-sea depth of 23 feet 11 inches. The Languedoc's draft is 22 feet six inches; that of the Tonnant is 23 feet 10 inches, and all the squadron's 74-gun ships draw from 21 to 22 feet of water; they alone can have superiority over the 64- and fifty-gun ships that the English possess. The sea swell at a river's mouth where banks confine the open sea is no longer that of the inner Delaware; sixteen inches of water below oneself is not sufficiently reassuring; the stability of the ship is much more easily compromised in entering a strait than in a channel sunk into the earth.

We have passed. The winds, after having permitted placing the cape to the west, have allowed bearing to the north to the northeast, the Narrows are already behind and the nautical business is finished. It is asked by the military planners what cooperation on land should the Americans furnish. To decide, even to presume, is impossible and would be ridiculous before learning what we must fight. The greatest force is always best. The English infantry is good, excellent; it has seen Forts Independence and Washington abandoned at its approach.⁴ It is to be feared that if they have taken them a second time, which is more than possible, they would not give them up as easily. The mob could surprise these forts, an encircling attack might bypass these forts, thus ignoring them, if they have been retaken, the sea of which we would be masters, things against nature for English heads, our ships of the line would bombard New-York, a descent of Americans on Long Island, some large cannon from the squadron, some mortars set up by them and with our help on the point of Brooklyn, Governor's Island seized, occupied by our troops, its batteries turned against the town, that they defended, a collection of rapid movements could shake the customary firmness of the British troops; but it would appear necessary, in stipulating a cooperation, not to forget that it must be more than proportioned, that the troops from the North and especially those from Boston are the most accustomed to seeing the English up close, and that the least evidence of weakness or timidity resulting in throwing all the weight of the action on us would be fatal: a useless loss of men, equipment, or munitions, of which the port of Toulon has been so cruelly miserly, would be too much and our subsequent inaction would become as injurious to the Americans as to ourselves.

Movement of the military machine perhaps too quickly will involve political circumspection. The King's minister will perhaps be obliged to press the request for compensation and to demand at the same time the most categorical answers. Yet even in its infancy as the American government is, it will already have its subtleties and every republic exhibits dilatoriness and has very little secrecy. Canada would belong to the Congress if it had, in the beginning, known promptly and sufficiently how to assist General Arnold: it is therefore necessary to vanquish the cunning, to push without giving offense, to press the uncertainty, to learn not to put one's true name on the mail and to subjugate sharply diverse wills and perhaps opposing interests. The resulting masterpiece will be the greater. It is worthy of him who has left the cabinet at Versailles in order to take the helm. If one thought to submit bad ideas or ones too little digested to his experience and his understanding, one might say that the first political words that he might pronounce must be sacramental, that he will smooth over difficulties well and that he may avoid many thorns if the first conference establishes certain preconditions: compensation for mutual efforts in all of America in general, guaranteed and convenient possession of the fishery, without any qualifications, and assistance in maintaining the liberating squadron. The following expand a little on this informed summary:

Response to number three. What has been established in the preceding article reinforces what the present article requires. American cooperation must be calculated not only on the number of defenders at New York, but on the amount of time it will require for assistance to arrive from Philadelphia. A diversion which is merely that, which does not have victory as its objective, is only a minor advantage: it consumes time, the result is doubtful; a real attack is the diversion that matters; only success produces it; it becomes doubly useful; because one has achieved success and impeded the enemy from acting; to attack without hitting hard and only as a diversion would be, in my opinion, in the beginning and with the English, the most pernicious of all courses. To consider how little time the season allows us to operate proves it. Our enemies have formerly done me the too great honor of fearing a bit my activity, this is a precious illusion. It must be, if possible, immediately reestablished.

Response to number four. I believe in obtaining help with provisions from the southern provinces. I count on those from Boston, but I fear a shortage of the most common and useful provisions while we are in the Delaware and Hudson Rivers; the inns there have been too often frequented; one has lived there too long at discretion; the obstruction of provisions from the South could without doubt make them promptly flow back on us; it is probable that after the coast has been cleared of English cruisers the Americans would make use of their ships, if there are any remaining, but the English navy is punctual and obstinate; it is not proven that those officers, as exacting as they are patient and intelligent would abandon their assigned stations when they learn that I am below them; they may very well conclude to the contrary that the intent of the squadron is not to ascend again; that they are secure and that they should remain where they have been sent; it would be necessary, in order to chase them away with certitude, to make landfall to the south and to sail up along the coast; that would delay us a little and although the channels would undoubtedly be cleared, one would have sounded the tocsin, and that is the worst yet. Military dilemmas have too often the sad inconvenience of having branches that cross themselves, that injure each other, and in lopping off the one that seems the least important, one loses at times the most productive one. one thinks, however, that one must not elevate secondary concerns to the level of the primary object. Rumors spread by Congress's ordering an expedition in the south, and preparations arranged for receiving us there, stores would not be lost, since they could afterwards be sent to us by sea, there could be a feinting maneuver that, if the wind allows, would consume only two or three days and would give us a sight of land bearing where we would not want to go, a limited operation that can bring together the double advantage of disguising equally the place we are going and the place we only want to free. The last option, finally, still very dangerous, is detaching ships of the line from the squadron while the remainder applies itself to an attack on Newport. This forms the enumeration⁵ of things to do and to discuss if the English tenaciously maintain their stations to the southward that our marked advantage in ships and unexpected attack would deprive them of. They very likely would maintain their stations if public rumors do not unsettle them.

To have what we desire proposed belongs too much to politics to weigh one down, in speaking to so great a master in the diplomatic art, on the utility of a process of the first principle. If we execute nothing more important than Newport, it would be necessary at least to do that and this least thing could be much. The British Navy's rigging is deposited there perhaps. Newport could become our primary naval base. Admiral Howe regarded it as most convenient, since it is from there that he wanted to send General Burgoyne.⁶ With this target as with all others, on what the place attacked contains and the force defending it depends how much assistance we must ask for. If nothing has been done and if it is possible totally to dispense with the help of troops of the united provinces in order to preserve their good will and their resources for the final operation, this would then give us the right to demand more and to request a larger equivalent in provisions; sure aids, intelligence from trustworthy inhabitants, including citizens of Newport, is a necessary cooperation everywhere. One thinks that one could obtain such things and that it will be necessary to obtain them promptly; for this place as for others, the flag of liberty borne by American hands and marching in front of the king's arms can become the ark of the Lord and make the walls fall.⁷ One needs a miracle when so much must be done in so short a time. An assortment of provisions to support the squadron's operations in the islands would be an equivalent so much the larger than needed merely to keep the squadron from starving, that to bring or to convoy edibles there for their own consumption is to work toward their happiness as to their defense, and that after the success of the undertaking the economy in the squadron's expenses is what will be the most desirable.

Response to number five. A de facto armistice appears so similar to a de jure armistice, and every convention tacitly agreed to or signed without France would appear henceforward so contrary to the King's interests, that merely considering it makes one shudder. Let us hasten, without denying the existence of such a possibility, to the matter of an attack on Halifax. The more the United States will consider this operation as being in its best interest, the more considerable can be the compensation expected by the French court, and the easier it will be to obtain. One believes that the assistance that the Americans will provide in troops and in vessels to carry them will be extensive and infinitely above actual needs for an infinity of reasons; specifying a few of them will enable you to extrapolate the others. The advanced season will force us to hasten Halifax; if we lose much time in the service of the Congress, for which we will have done everything freely, no time will remain for the service of His Majesty. Winter does not wait, it chases; or one must spend it where one finds oneself, which would be a travesty and render us useless for six months: It will no longer be necessary in the last season to think of returning to the southward, it will be from the north that we shall need to make for the Windward islands: without doubt the States will leave a strong garrison at Halifax, it will diminish the number that will operate with and for our sake: this word brings us to the designation of the island; it requires a digression: my instructions, without being exclusive, name the Island of St. John: the King's minister plenipotentiary, judging from what he has told me, leans toward Newfoundland, it being the seat of the fishery; while the island of St. John is fertile; seamen are the commodity we need, the cod fishery produces them; St. John is small; Spain, always possessed of a territorial mania, will only accept the greater part of a large territory, if the compass does not open on the map, she will believe that one is offering her nothing. I agree totally with Mr. Gérard, but I am servile to instructions: I would like if it were possible to satisfy everything. Here is my castle in Spain; a system in order to be perfect must be general and uniform; that one for America is liberty; that Newfoundland may preserve its liberty, that it may send, if it can be done, representatives to the Congress; that its town of Plaisance in which there are sixteen thousand souls, or St. John, which the English have made their headquarters, may be as sovereign as Boston, but considering the importance to America as to Europe that the English do not return as the only fishermen of the island of Newfoundland, make it the fourteenth province or united to one of the thirteen, either under the special protection of France, so that Spain can accede to it, or arrange it so each crown is sovereign in portions of the island currently not settled, like the shore of Trepassey,⁸ or this cape sufficiently designated in the treaty of Utrecht, and which English dishonesty has never wanted that anyone would call it, Cape Riche;⁹ that the eastern or western parts et cetera may be divided, so that the three powers guarantee each other exclusive fishing rights in specific areas, in order to avoid arguments, that on all coasts of Newfoundland, each nation's right of drying fish will be reserved and restricted to its own territory; that France and Spain too, in case such may be their pleasure, protect the security of the island, in general with their own troops, paid for by subsidies to the American province of Newfoundland for the perpetual upkeep of regular troops, officers, engineers, artillery, and fortifications, so that this important maritime jewel can never, by any means, fall again into the hands of the common enemy; that these heavy subsidies paid to the government of Newfoundland might form a link, a link moreover between us and Congress, and that finally the United States cede and guarantee to the King sovereignty over the little island of St. John, much less useful to the fishery than as a supply base, to assure the revolution or the conquest of Canada, and in consequence of being in the hands of France more advantageous to the United States, which desire this revolution or this conquest of Canada, than to ourselves who do not think about that and who would find on the island of St. John, by its current cultivation and by the goodness of its soil, merely food supplies to sustain our new establishments of Newfoundland: that this island of St. John, in becoming subject to the King, may lose nothing of the rights that England wanted to take from America, that to the contrary they may be carried there to the highest degree, that they may be consecrated there, if it may be, in a manner to render it impossible for any minister, and, what is a hundred times worse, any blind bureau chief or despotic governor to tamper with the organization; that Americans may have constantly in view a counter-example to the English errors, that some among them may find there true freedom of action, of discourse, and tranquility that worry, jealousy, and ingratitude, and all the small shocks that republican government cause to be lost rather than to be under the cap, a bit chimerical, of a pretended liberty sometimes ideal and often a queen more anxious than is Her Majesty the autocrat of all the Russias; such is the chimera that I believe infinitely useful to be realized; as it strongly resembles the fable of the milk pot.¹⁰ Alas, after all my “thats”, which will too probably be some abridged “that’s”, I have the right at least of telling everything that is in my dream, like the little milkmaid: it seems to me already that I see all that.

Apostles sent as soon as possible to Plaisance, to St. John, Newfoundland, and to the island of St. John itself are the best for realizing this dream; it would be necessary that the mission be preached well and solidly when the squadron goes to remove scruples; the greater the number of Americans with us, the more our gospel would appear plausible. Choosing good people, and of such numbers to sustain it, speeding their departure, overcoming difficulties, providing instructions in which everything will have been foreseen, laying a good foundation, these would be the great services that the King’s minister plenipotentiary would render to His Majesty. This is what made me say in the committee that success depended more on the choice of him who would accept this difficult commission than on the naming of the general: if my tiresome repetition on this head has resulted in the voyage of M. Gérard, I shall felicitate myself on having been truly useful in the matter. Mr. Gérard will sense more than anyone the importance of covert means. They will be at least as fruitful as overt ones; the first ones will be his doing, all honor will belong to him; he will also share the glory of the American troops who will assist us or it will owe it to him.

What he has had the honor of saying to me on the subject of Bermuda has brought me to reflect deeply on this object: it is not the conversation that I had a year ago with Mr. the Count Aranda¹¹ that made me refrain from inviting an American flotilla there, the arguments of the Spanish ambassador had not persuaded me then. Today the wheel having turned perhaps Mr. d’Aranda would not think the same way. It is the nautical impediment of not being able to anchor at the Bermudas, of only making a cruise in a region rife with hurricanes or with calms, of being obliged to depart from it totally and of leaving people behind who could not help thinking that they had been abandoned, it is the long time that might be consumed in consolidating their revolution, it is that which tipped the balance for me. I assure you that political reasons or the very minor disruption of the mission do not worry me at all in an operation to which I will consent if Mr. the Minister plenipotentiary continues to believe it so beneficial; it appears to me, everything considered, to be advantageous, for the security of our trade, or in order to interfere always with that of the English, it ought to be adopted if Mr. Deane has preserved while abroad what his colleagues in revolution have lost by remaining in their places, their credit and their place in Congress, and if our pilgrimage to the Bermudas provides some advantages in the negotiations and an additional means to obtain more assistance against Newfoundland, against the island of St. John, and, if possible, against Barbados. I may find it necessary to attack this latter island before it is known that I am in the Windward islands; and if I am perfectly informed of the maritime forces, I will probably decide to put into Martinique only after having begun to act against that which is farthest to the windward, because to return against the wind is too time consuming and because surprise is worth more than four battles, more than a reinforcement of a ship of the line and three frigates. If the Bermudas operation assured a large supply of provisions for our islands, this certitude would for me be sufficient to risk the inconvenience of a possible gale and the sad role of an inactive spectator. Ships laden with merchandise could also carry troops; but it is absolutely necessary that all the vessels sail like our bad sailers, which do not pretend to great speed.

We shall therefore be in the satisfying position of operating even in the Windward islands under the political influence of the caduceus of Mr. Gérard. He will share so much more our success when he will have augmented our means. Assistance of the second order will not be less important. Falling under this heading are good pilots, charts, detailed plans either for the execution of a project or for knowledge of places. A half dozen emissaries or brave, intriguing subordinates, news, and a purchase of ten or twelve negro slaves who would be freed, whose projected employment requires a specification a little less truncated than that of the other objects. My instructions rigidly enjoin me to retain only Dominica, an expedition to be made only by leaving from fort Royal. Everything else that is enjoined on me to attack will be abandoned; I am ordered to do as much injury as possible to English trade: to give freedom to all negroes who may join me before the capture or surrender of each place which will be, without doubt, an irreplaceable loss for England. It deprives the farmer of his livestock and the manufacturer of his workers all at once, to return under the lash of an overseer slaves once unchained is difficult, laborious, and sometimes impossible. The negroes whom I free that I do not enlist as soldiers I would arm, or I would allow to arm themselves, and they would form in the places and after my departure an infinitely troublesome leaven of rebellion, the sugar would feel the effects for a long time, and if they had someone to lead them, they would inconvenience the English Windward islands as much as the negroes of the blue mountains have tormented the colonists of Jamaica;¹² if they had been, at that time, secretly encouraged and armed, the English would have been expelled or all their plantations would have lain destroyed for a long time. My emissaries, white and black, would be employed from the instant of landing to spread among the habitations the desire and the certitude of freedom. For that purpose people who speak English would be needed; the blacks will be sooner persuaded by those of their own color than by the whites; but some of the latter will be necessary to direct the machine and to be, in a pinch, spies on the others; the choice of these various instruments seems to me infinitely important; that is all to say; he who is in major affairs will never, I hope, appear unworthy to those who have for a long time been accustomed to directing large undertakings by all the means that they have; in regard to money, it cannot, in my opinion, be better employed. It is enjoined on me, in my instructions, to leave the new colony in the north and that of Dominica protected from any insult. I shall employ, for the execution of such a difficult order, I shall plead for both islands of the north and of the middle the same bleeding, freedom. The negroes and the soldiers supplied by what I can draw from the garrisons of Martinique and Guadeloupe and by what I shall leave myself are the sole means that I have to render Dominica difficult to recapture: this method is good, for I have tested it; it is principally through the assistance of freed negroes, made soldiers and sailors, that I succeeded in my expedition in India;¹³ there they proved themselves men of courage, faithfulness, and discipline, which erased from my mind all contrary prejudices. For me, experience has proven the truth of two principles; the first is that everything that calls itself a man, when he attains a better condition, if one uses him there, occupies him, and inspires emulation in him, can be led and animated; the second is that if one fought in fire, one would have to try to use salamanders in it;¹⁴ the tropics are the element of the negroes and almost everywhere poison for whites.

I am not unaware that what is, in my opinion, without real inconvenience nor suitable for the re-conquered Dominica, would elsewhere meet almost insurmountable obstacles. I know that every colonist of St. Domingue and of Martinique sees an armed negro as a monster ready to devour him and to revenge his fellows. These deceived colonists see, however, under their eyes what they could have noticed as well as I, that is that free negroes are those who treat slaves with the greatest rigor; they are their cruelest and most mortal enemies. I watched over, stopped, and punished their barbarity for three years;¹⁵ I foresee that the rich inhabitants will say that the English, if they take St. Domingue or Martinique, will do the same thing as I and that they will ruin them and free a part of their slaves. It would not be a great evil if this beneficial and ill-founded fear would increase in their hearts the desire to defend themselves well. Our fellow citizens of America ordinarily more witty than profound would give a new evidence by this reasoning: the English like too well whatever enriches them thus to spoil their game; our enemies will trust too long in their maritime superiority for them not to hope to preserve what they will have taken; instead of diminishing the number of negroes working, they will increase them; that is what they did at Guadeloupe and at Martinique when they had them; their system would still be the same; mine is that of the moment; it is uniquely that of the places that we shall abandon and that of Dominica, a small island currently without means of defense and that we wish to retain. I do not pretend to extend my project farther; it does not offend the law of war or of nations; if the negroes are only beasts, armies, in every country, make use of horses and oxen; they carry them away; if these black men are peasants, those of Saxony have been, very much despite themselves, made into Prussian soldiers. I only plan to make voluntary recruits or to recompense those who will be useful to the King's army. The legal reasons and those of the present or future interest seen in the largest extent militate thus in favor of my system; but, instead of a cursory view, I have made a memorandum to explain it; it is time to return to the subject at hand.

Response to the observation. All the provisions, all the commodities will be infinitely dear; this is also my opinion; one hundred thousand reasons persuade me of it. It is said that no one has been inclined in Paris to advise or to offer the Americans very good bargains. We must expect the worst and all manner of retaliation; the devastations, paper money, our letters of credit, which will only be worth this paper at most, which are only orders to pay on someone who owes, and the, without doubt exorbitant, rate of merchandise will render the excessive number of our needs not only very ruinous, but very difficult to obtain; that is what makes me desire that which the limited speed of our frigates has prevented and will prevent us from getting, a prize laden with things that Americans lack, and they lack much. I think that in their position, as in ours, it is only by exchanges of things each side needs that the warehouses will open and that merchandise can be returned to a reasonable price. Without doubt, nothing would be more useful than to have Congress take responsibility for providing victuals at a suitable and moderate price; but it would require that while doing it, Congress remained convinced that it is vital not to make promises that it cannot keep. In regard to local provisions the authorities in Paris can set the price of commodities and, even more difficult, force their sale; but in a country that is a theater of war, in an entirely new republic in which all the sinews of government are not yet well formed, nor in their place, this order, instead of being useful, would perhaps drive vendors away. A strong exhortation would perhaps yield more: the Congress could say on the occasion that it is the liberators of the shores, those who will reanimate shipping and abundance, in a word, friends of the nation who must be assisted, subsisted and not be driven away with excessive prices; such is my opinion; I submit it to that of Mr. Gérard. Mr. the Chevalier de Borda¹⁶ is preparing a very detailed report on provisions. His orderly mind, his zeal and his talents promise that he will leave nothing undone; I shall content myself with observing in advance that it is necessary to replace with things that are possible those that will not be, such as, for example, salt provisions with meat or smoked fish if there are any to be had; all kinds of preserved vegetables and especially sauerkraut, if we can make any, they are great anti-scorbutics. Boston's ovens could, from the first, make biscuit; it would be sent to us at Newport; bricks for constructing a second oven on board each ship of the line seem to me the first thing to request in reference to provisions, as six luggage-trucks or timber-carts will be the first thing that the army will demand, and perhaps even for the expedition against New York and Newport; they would be indispensable for Halifax. Each timber-cart consists of two wheels of the largest diameter, of the greatest width of rim and strength of spokes that can be found, having a strong axel-tree, of wood or iron, in order to support a twenty-four-pounder cannon that will be suspended beneath it; a tree trunk or pole serves to pull it. It is thus that the iron twenty-four-pounders were easily placed in battery at the sieges of Madras and of Fort St. David.¹⁷ If we could obtain twelve of these timber-carts, that would be even better. We also need some covered wagons for protecting munitions and for the carts and what was¹⁸ forgotten or refused at Toulon, for powder without balls does not kill even quails. A statement of the need for these three objects will be particularly drawn up and provided.

2. Silas Deane, former American Commissioner to France, recalled to America and passenger in Languedoc.

3. Mud I.

4. During the New York campaign, Fort Washington surrendered to the British on 17 Nov. 1776. By Fort Independence d'Estaing may mean Fort Lee, which was also call Fort Constitution, across the Hudson from Fort Washington. The Americans abandoned Fort Lee on the approach of the British on 20 Nov. 1776. The American abandonment of the fortifications on Mount Independence in conjunction with the 5 July 1777 withdrawal from Fort Ticonderoga does not fit the context here, which clearly refers to the vicinity of Manhattan. Nor does the so-called “Fort Independence fiasco” of 17–25 Jan. 1777 fit the context, since this involved a failed American attempt to capture a Hessian-held post north of Spuyten Duyvil Creek, not an American withdrawal on the approach of the English infantry.

5. In the course of revising this text, at one point this section read, “de partir il faudrat discuter s'il erat tem prendre les stations Anglaises,” or, “to begin with we shall have to discuss if there will be time to take the English stations.”

6. In his negotiations with the Americans, Howe proposed sending Burgoyne and the Convention Army back to England via either New York or Newport.

7. In Joshua 6, while the Hebrews were besieging Jericho, their priests carried the ark of the Lord around the city wall blowing trumpets, until the seventh day, when the wall fell, enabling the Hebrews to take the city.

8. Trépassés, or Trepassey, is located in Trepassey Bay, on the southeastern corner of Newfoundland's Avalon Peninsula.

9. Paragraph 13 of the 1713 Treaty of Utrecht, while confirming Newfoundland to Great Britain, allowed French subjects rights to fish and dry their catches on the island in an area beginning at Cap-de-Bona-Vista, continuing to the extreme northern point of land, and from there westward to Pointe-Riche. M. Charles Giraud, The Treaty of Utrecht (London, 1847), Appendix XI, pp. xl–xli.

10. In Jean de La Fontaine's fable "La laitière et le pot au lait," ("The Dairymaid and her Milk-pot"), a young farmer's wife hurries off to the market to sell a jug of milk. Along the way, she thinks about buying eggs with the proceeds, imagines hatching chicks from the eggs, raising the chicks, selling the chickens in return for a piglet, and raising the piglet into a fat pig, whose pork she would exchange for a cow and calf. At this last thought, she jumps for joy, dropping the jar and losing all the milk, along with the animals of her reverie. The moral of La Fontaine's story brings to mind d'Estaing's reference at the beginning of this paragraph to his castle in Spain: "Who buildeth not, sometimes, in air/ His cots, or seats, or castles fair?/ From kings to dairy women, —all, — / The wise, the foolish, great and small, — / Each thinks his waking dream the best . . ." The Fables of La Fontaine, Translated from the French, by Elizur Wright Jr., (Boston, 1841 [and later editions]), book 7, fable 10.

12. In 1760 a slave revolt, known as Tacky's Rebellion after one of its leaders, and its suppression resulted in the deaths of 60 whites and more than 300 slaves, and the deportation of about 600 slaves to the Bay of Honduras. Five years later, a slave uprising designed to take place simultaneously on 17 plantations was suppressed when it broke out prematurely. In 1766 31 slaves rose and killed 19 whites. In 1776, two years before d'Estaing wrote this report, Jamaican authorities suppressed a widespread revolt, subsequently trying 135 slaves for rebellion, executing 17, sentencing 11 to corporal punishment, and transporting 45 to another colony. Jamaica also had autonomous maroon communities with which the British government had an uneasy relationship. O'Shaughnessy, An Empire Divided: The America Revolution and the British Caribbean (Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 2000), 38, 40–43, 151–52.

13. D'Estaing (1729–1794) had become a musketeer before he was ten years old. He served with distinction as a French army officer during the War of the Austrian Succession in Flanders. Having risen to the rank of brigadier general by the Seven Years War, he commanded troops at the sieges of Fort Saint David and Madras, India. He was taken prisoner by the British at the latter. After his release, he commanded two armed vessels on a cruise of 20 months that destroyed several British settlements on the Persian Gulf and along the west coast of Sumatra. His accomplishments led to his appointment to naval rank. For a book-length biography, see Michel, Comte d'Estaing.

15. D'Estaing was governor of St. Domingue from 1764 to 1766.

16. Lieutenant de vaisseau Jean-Charles, Chevalier de Borda.

17. Fort St. David, a British fort near Cuddalore, 100 miles south of Madras, fell to the French in 1758. The French besieged British-held Madras, on India's Coromandel Coast, from 1758 to 1759.

18. Doniol's transcription, from "voiture" ("carts") to this point, reads, "il faudrat aussi, ce qui ne serat pas facile à trouver, du plomb," or, "also needed will be, something that will not be easy to find, shot." Doniol, Histoire de la Participation de la France, 3: 252.

AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE TO CAPTAIN ABRAHAM WHIPPLE, CONTINENTAL NAVY

Sir

Passi June 23 1778.

As We have a Prospect of an Exchange of Prisoners, you are desired to send Us with all possible dispatch, a List or Return of all the Prisoners you have in your Custody, and We shall give orders concerning them as soon as We shall be informed to what Place they are to be sent to be exchanged.

As to your future Destination, We desire you to take on Board your Frigate as many Arms and Cloaths or other Merchandises as you can, without impeding her in Sailing or fighting, and no more, with which you are to acquaint M^r Schweighauser, who will send them on board.

If M^r Schweighauser Should have a Vessell bound to America, with stores for the public you are to take her under your Convoy.

You are to Use your best Endeavours to make Prises, in the Course of your Passage and in all Respects to annoy the Enemy, as much as you can and are at Liberty to go out of your way, for so good a Purpose.

If you can take or destroy any of the Ennemy's Fishery, on the Banks of Newfoundland, you are not to omit the opportunity.

As Transports are constantly passing between England and Hallifax[,] Rhode Island, New York and Philadelphia, and from each of those Places to all the others, you will use your best Endeavours to intercept some of them.

If you Should have Dispatches committed to your Care, either from the Government of this Kingdom, or from Us, you are to have them carefully encased in Lead, and in Case of Misfortune, which God forbid, you are to take effectual Care, by sinking them, that they may not fall into the Enemies Hands. We wish you a prosperous Cruise and Voyage, and are [&c.]¹

AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE TO JEAN-DANIEL SCHWEIGHAUSER

Sir

Passi June 23^d. 1778.

We had this day the Honor of your Letter of the 18th of June,¹ and are obliged to You for the Information you have given Us concerning the freight of Ships.

We have ordered Captains Whipple and Jones to prepare their Frigates forthwith to return home, and have ordered them to take on Board as many Arms and other Stores as they can, without obstructing them in sailing or fighting and no more, of which they are to inform You, that you may order them on board accordingly. There are some Arms repaired, which We wish to have sent on board these Ships if they can take them, or any of them.²

We inclose you Resolutions of Congress concerning the distribution of prizes,³ by which you will govern yourself in the distribution of those of the Providence and the Ranger.—The Drake belongs wholly to the Captors. The Bounties upon Men and Guns are not to be paid by Us or by You, but by Congress in America until they shall order otherwise. That part of the other prizes, which by the Resolutions of Congress, belongs to the United States you will receive, and giving Us Notice of the Value or Amount of it, will carry to the Credit of the United subject to our orders.

We have a prospect of exchanging the prisoners & have ordered Returns of them all to be made to Us, that We may transmit them to England.

NB. Admiral Byron's Fleet having sailed & probably for America, it is desired that the Notice⁴ sent of its having been countermanded, may not be sent to America.

AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE TO FRANCIS COFFYN

Sir,

Passi June 26th 1778.

We have had the Honor of your Letters of June 18th and 19th, referring to a former Letter respecting a Surgeon's Bill, which we have received.¹

As to the Surgeon's Bill, We leave it wholly to You, to settle with him and allow him what you shall think just. The Account appears to Us to be too high, and We think with You, that the Deduction you mention ought to be made.

We are obliged to You, Sir, for the Articles of Intelligence you have sent Us, and wish for further favors of that kind, and approve much of your proposal of transmitting Intelligence to America by every Opportunity.

The Whalemens and other Seamen you mention, We wish may be sent to Brest or to Nantz, to serve on Board our Frigates, where they will find many of their Countrymen and Comrades. At Nantes or Brest they will find M^r. Schweighauser or his Agent, who will find them Employment immediately: Unless they should be willing to engage with M^r. Amiel, which We should prefer.²

Inclosed with this, you have a Commission, Instructions and a Bond.³ The Bond We wish you to see executed with the usual Formalities, and when executed transmit it to Us. The Commission and Instructions, you will deliver to Captⁿ. Amiel. We are [&c.]

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM GUERNSEY, JUNE 28

"A large Chasse-maree, outward-bound for America, laden with ammunition, &c. after having been taken by the Active of Jersey,¹ was chased for twenty-nine hours, by a French frigate, and in all probability would have been taken, but luckily the French frigate carried away her main-top-mast, which prevented her continuing the chase, upon which she fired her broadside, but to no purpose, as the prize was out of shot. The Brunswick, formerly a transport, after having been taken and retaken several times, is sent into Guernsey by one of their privateers.²

"The Speedwell, Capt. Bushell,³ has sent in a French brig, outward bound for America, laden with salt, brandy, and bale goods; she was chased by a French frigate very closely, but having a good pilot on board; she run among the rocks, and so got clear.

"The Vultur[e], Capt. Chabot, is arrived at Jersey;⁴ he had made two or three prizes, but was so closely pursued by several French frigates, as to oblige him to take him men from them, and leave them for the enemy. Several French ships of war are cruising about Guernsey, with numberless other cruizers, which renders it very difficult for the prizes to get in."

LOUIS XVI TO LIEUTENANT GÉNÉRAL DES ARMÉES NAVALES
COMTE D'ORVILLIERS

L'insulte faite à mon pavillon par une Frégate du Roi d'Angleterre envers ma frégate la Belle Poule; la Saisie faite par une escadre Anglaise au mépris du droit des gens de mes Frégates la Licorne et la Pallas et de mon Luger le Coureur;¹ La Saisie en mer et la confiscation des navires appartenant à mes Sujets, faites par l'Angleterre contre la foi des traités; le trouble continuel et le dommage que cette Puissance apporte au commerce maritime de mon Royaume et de mes Colonies de l'Amérique, soit par ses bâtimens de guerre, soit par les Corsaires dont elle autorise et excite déprédations: tous ces procédés injurieux, principalement l'insulte fait a mon pavillon m'ont forcé de mettre un terme à la modération que je m'étais proposée, et ne me permettent pas de suspendre plus long tems les effets de mon ressentiment: la dignité de ma Couronne et la protection que je dois à mes Sujets, exigent que j'use enfin de représailles, que j'agisse hostilement contre l'Angleterre, et que mes vaisseaux attaquent et tachent de S'emparer ou détruire tous les vaisseaux, frégates ou autres bâtimens appartenant au Roi d'Angleterre qu'ils pourront rencontrer; et qu'ils arrêtent et se saisissent pareillement de tous navires marchands Anglais dont ils pourront avoir l'occasion de s'emparer. Je vous fais donc cette lettre pour vous dire que mon intention est que dans les instructions que vous aurez à donner aux Commandans des vaisseaux, frégates et autres bâtimens qui partiront de Brest² sous votre commandement, ou que vous jugerez nécessaire de détacher pour des croisières particulieres, soit pour les escortes à donner aux navires du Commerce, soit pour croiser sur les côtes et au large sans êtres chargé d'ecortes, vous leur prescrirez D'attaquer tous bâtimens appartenans au Roi d'Angleterre qu'ils pourront rencontrer, s'ils jugent pouvoir le faire avec avantage; et après s'en être emparés de les conduire dans le port dont ils se trouveront le plus près; et que vous leur prescrirez également d'arrêter tous les navires marchands Anglais qu'ils pourront trouver à la mer pour les faire conduire dans les ports de mon royaume ou de mes Colonies. Je suis assuré de trouver dans la justice de ma cause, dans la valeur et dans l'habilité des officiers généraux de mon armée navale, dans le talent et la bravoure de mes Capitaines, dans le dévouement de mes officiers et la fermeté de mes équipages, et dans l'amour de tous mes sujets—les ressources que j'ai toujours éprouvées de leur part.

[Translation]

My Lord,

The insult done to my flag by a Frigate of the King of England towards my frigate Belle Poule; the seizure made by an English squadron in contempt of the law of nations of my frigates Licorne and Pallas and of my lugger Coureur;¹ the seizure at sea and the confiscation of ships belonging to my subjects, made by England against the faith of treaties; the continual trouble and the damage that this power brings to the maritime trade of my Kingdom and of my Colonies in America, whether it be by ships of war or by the privateers which it authorizes and incites to depredations; all these injurious proceedings, principally the insult done to my flag, have forced me to put an end to the moderation that I was proposing to myself, and do not permit me to suspend any longer the effects of my resentment; the dignity of my Crown and the protection that I owe to my subjects require that I make use, finally, of reprisals, that I act hostilely against England, and that my ships attack and attempt to capture or destroy all the ships of the line, frigates, or other ships belonging to the King of England that they might be able to encounter; and that they stop and seize as well all English merchantmen that they may have the occasion to capture. I am thus writing this letter to you to tell you that my intention is that in the instructions that you will give to the commanders of the ships of the line, frigates, and other ships that will leave Brest² under your command, or that you will judge necessary to detach for individual cruises, whether it be to convoy commercial shipping, or whether it be to cruise along the coasts and at sea without being entrusted with convoys, you will require them to attack all ships belonging to the King of England that they may encounter, if they judge that they can do it with advantage; and after they have been captured, to lead them into the nearest port; and that you will also require them to stop all the English merchant ships that they may find at sea in order to have them brought into the ports of my kingdom or of my Colonies. I am assured of finding in the justice of my cause, in the valor and sagacity of my general officers of my navy, in the talent and bravery of my captains, in the devotion of my officers, and the steadfastness of my crews, and in the love of all my subjects, the resources that I have always met with on their part.

Written at Versailles, the 28th of June. (the date (28) in the hand of the King)

In the hand of the King, Approved, at the Admiralty which is in the Offices of the port.

Copy, FrPNA, Marine B¹, vol. 286, fol. 66. Notation: "Copie de la lettre du Roi/à C^{te} d'Orvilliers, L^e g^{al}. des armées Navales/Du 28. Juin 1778"; translation: "Copy of the letter from the King to Comte d'Orvilliers, Lieutenant Général des Armées Navales, 28 June 1778." Nearly identical letters were sent to the Mediterranean fleet and other naval ports. Doniol, Histoire de la participation de la France 3: 150–51. The king addressed a similarly worded letter dated 10 July to Jean-Louis de Bourbon, duc de Penthièvre, his cousin, who held the title of "Admiral de France." That letter is reproduced in part in Lacour-Gayet, La Marine Militaire, pp. 118–20.

1. On 15 June, Isaac-Jean-Timothée Chadeau de La Clocheterie, Lieutenant de vaisseau of the French Navy, commanding a squadron consisting of his own frigate, Belle Poule, frigate Licorne, Chevalier Gouzillon de Bélizal, corvette Hirondelle, and lugger Coureur, sailed from Brest for a cruise in the English Channel. On the 17th, this squadron fell in with the English fleet under Adm. Augustus Keppel. With the British fleet gaining on his command, de La Clocheterie gave Gouzillon de Bélizal permission to do as he thought best, ordered Hirondelle to seek shelter where it could—the latter put into the Île de Batz—and kept Coureur with him. H.M. frigate Arethusa intercepted Belle Poule and demanded that the French commander alter his course to speak to the admiral. De La Clocheterie refused the demand and a prolonged artillery duel ensued. Eventually the British fleet came up in Arethusa's support and Belle Poule gained the protection of Camplouis Bay, near Plouescat, on the Normandy coast. In the meantime, H.M. cutter Alert made prize of Coureur. The next morning, Gouzillon de Bélizal found himself in the midst of three British ships of the line, to which he surrendered Licorne. Also on the 18th, the French frigate Pallas, cruising independently, fell in with, and was seized by, the British fleet. De La Clocheterie's report of Belle Poule's engagement with Arethusa is printed in Doniol, Histoire de la participation de la France 3: 163–64. For the British version of the encounters, see Adm. the Honorable Augustus Keppel to Philip Stephens, 18 and 20 June, UKLPR, Adm. 1/94, 375–80 (published in the London Gazette, 23–27 June 1778). The French government considered the attack on Belle Poule the same as a declaration of war. The Comte de Vergennes informed the Spanish ambassador: “Comme nous ne pouvons considérer cette attaque que comme une rupture préméditée, nous allons agir de la même manière que si la guerre étoit déclarée”; “As we can consider this attack only as a premeditated rupture, we shall act in the same manner as if war were declared.” Doniol, Histoire de la participation de la France 3: 149.

2. The word Brest is written above a dotted line, suggesting the substitution of the names of ports for the purpose of sending the same orders to various commanders. Letters of reprisal had already been issued to merchants whose ships had been taken and confiscated by the British. Doniol, Histoire de la participation de la France 3: 150–51.

3. The fuller phrase implied is some variant of: “Et la présente n’étant à autre fin, je prie Dieu qu’il vous ait en sa sante et digne garde”; “And the present having no other purpose, I pray that God may guard you and keep you well.”

CAPTAIN JOHN PAUL JONES, CONTINENTAL NAVY, TO THE OFFICERS OF THE CONTINENTAL NAVY SHIP RANGER

Gentlemen,

Passy June 29th. 1778.—

On my arrival at Versailles I obtained permission from the French Ministry to dispose of our Prizes to the best Advantage without being subject to any expence from the Admiralty—I have also got the Commissioners to write to the person who sold our Prizes at Bourdeaux in express terms to remit the Captors part and some of it is since come to the hands of M^r Williams—¹ It shall be my care to get the Prisoners Exchanged as soon as possible—to Realize our Prizes, and to obtain leave to return on a Cruize to America—All this I believe I shall very soon be able to effect—and therefore you may publish it in the Ship for the General Happiness and Satisfaction— There will I am persuaded nothing interfere with our proceeding to America unless the Ranger should be previously employed as a Cartel in the approaching exchange of Prisoners—This may or may not happen: and as it will be a Work of little time and of no Danger it cannot but be agreeable to the feelings of Humanity, it might I think be Accomplished before the Prizes can be realized—I only wait here for the list of prisoners which I wrote for some time ago and which I hope will be very exact.—² If the List is not already forwarded I desire it may be immediately sent to Doctor Franklin—let it express the Names and Quality of every Prisoner—Let the Officers (Prisoners) upon rec^t: of this be served whole allowance, and the private Men two thirds Allowance of Liquor provided they make no undue use of it.—

I rest satisfied that what I have already said will afford General Satisfaction in the Ship and I rely on every person to exert himself Cheerfully for the Honor which we have already acquired, as well as for their own interest and that of the Service—I shall soon be able to Convince every person under my Command that I take particular pleasure to make them Rich and Happy.—

As Brest is not a place of Commerce I would not recommend that the Prize Goods should be sold without having first given information to the Merchants at L'Orient & Nantes &c to attend the Sale that they may raise the Prize [i.e., Price]—I do not expect that the Sale will begin before I reach Brest as I may perhaps bring some purchasers with me—but if it should begin I desire that Thirty Hogsheads of the Best porter with all the Packages of Baggage and Plate &c may be carefully Stored and preserved until I come down³

I beg as a particular favor that I may have the pleasure of finding the Ranger perfectly Clean an in Complete Order—her Bottom excepted I am [&c.]

N.B. Desire M^r Bursolle⁴ to keep any letters which may appear for me until I see him unless in the meantime I should write him to the Contrary.

My Lord,

The several Letters from your Excellency to No [blank] have been received, and laid before the King.²

It is much to be wished that the Reprimand sent by M. de Florida Blanca³ to General O'Neil,⁴ may be the means of preventing Cunningham from being again allowed to enter into the Ports of Spain, where he has so frequently received Assistance that has enabled him to make Depredations on Our Trade with that Kingdom. The Conduct of His Catholick Majesty⁵ towards this Country is so much an Object of general attention, that Circumstances that would be immaterial at any other Time, become important at the present. Your Excellency will express to M. de Florida Blanca, His Majesty's Satisfaction at the Orders given on that Subject, and his sincere Desire to avoid making any Complaints, as His Majesty most earnestly wishes the utmost Confidence should subsist between the two Kingdoms, and you are directed to assure His Catholick Majesty, through that Minister, that every attention shall be given to preserve entire the Harmony so happily subsisting between the two Crowns. SURGEON JAMES BREHON, CONTINENTAL NAVY, TO BENJAMIN FRANKLIN

May it please your Excellency Forton July. 1778
 Having addressed you twice before which I imagine have never reached you from my receiving no Answer and nothing but distress could have induced me to trouble you so often which distress has indeed of late been allevated in a great measure by the Generosity of the British People which I believe you have already been informed of and the sums which the so generously Voted for our Support is as we are Informed almost expend'd owing to the great number of other Prisoners added to our number since that time, and our former distress begins to stare us and we already anticipate the horrors of our former situation, & In order to remedy in Some measure the wants which I am likely to feel I make bold to demand of you a small sum of Money which I should not do were I not intitled thereto by being in the Continental Service as you are already Informed by a List carried over by M^r Thornton from hence¹ and the Number of Prisoners committed Since his departure am^t to 78 Amoungst which is Cap^t Hindman of the Con^l Ship Alfred and four of his Officers which Joyned to the four of us belonging to the Hornet are all the Continental Officers which are in this Prison.²

LORD GEORGE GERMAIN TO GENERAL OFFICER COMMANDING IN WEST FLORIDA

Copy
Sir

Whitehall, 1st July 1778

The last Advices from West Florida represent that Province to be in a State of great Alarm, on Account of the depredations committed by a Party of the Rebels upon the Mississippi and the Reports they spread of a larger Body preparing to follow them, intending to establish themselves in that Country. I trust the Measures taken by Gov^r. Chester and the Superintendent,¹ will have had the Effect to prevent those Plunderers doing further mischief and that you will have arrived in time to repel any more serious Attack that might have been meditated by a greater Number. But as the Command of the Navigation of the Mississippi & of the Communications from thence to the Indian Nations in the Southern District is essential to the Security of His Majesty's Possessions in West Florida, and to the protection of the King's faithful Subjects, and their Property, and also of great Importance to the Trade of this Country, it is determined immediately to establish a considerable Post upon that River. The Situation that appears most proper for the purpose is the Entrance of the Mississippi into the Ibberville at or near the place where Fort Bute stood.² But it is left to your Judgement assisted by the engineer to fix upon the Spot. I am therefore to signify to you the King's Command that you do, with all convenient dispatch, proceed to the Mississippi taking with you such part of the Troops under your Command as you shall think necessary and the proper Persons in the Engineer's Department, together with such Ordnance, and a proportion of Stores as may be wanted and can be spared from Pensacola, and there lay out and erect a Fort of such Form, and as capacious as you shall judge proper, taking care that it be so constructed as to be capable of being defended by a Garrison of 300 Men for which Number Barracks are to be provided and a Magazine also built. As this is intended to be a permanent Establishment, the Materials should be of the most durable Nature that can be procured in the Country and the best adapted to resist the Effect of the Climate, and the greatest frugality is to be observed in the procuring of them, and in every part of the Work. And I think it necessary to recommend to you, to pay particular Attention to these Circumstances, as Experience has shewn that all the Works hitherto constructed in West Florida except the Barracks built at Pensacola by Captain Hutchinson³ have been only a Waste of the public Money. The Officers of the Board of Ordnance will receive Orders to draw upon that Board for defraying the Expence, but as the Works are to be carried on conformable to your directions and under your Orders, your Certificate expressing your Approbation of the Service for which the Bills are drawn, will be necessary to accompany them in order to secure their payment and every Voucher that is transmitted must carry a Mark of having been inspected by you.

If you shall find that the great Width of the Mississippi & the Rapidity of the Current at certain Seasons may make it necessary to have a floating Guard upon that River for the effectual Security and Command of the Navigation, you are to build or provide two or more Row Gallies properly armed for that purpose, to be manned occasionally by the Troops of the Garrison, and a proper Dock for them to lie in under the protection of the Guns of the Fort, must be prepared.

Governor Chester acquaints me in his last dispatch that the Works which M^r Durnford had been constructing at Pensacola were fallen into Ruin as soon as finished & that in consequence of the Representation of Lieutenant Colonels Stiell & Dickinson and Captain Johnstone he had directed him to provide other Materials and set about other Works for the Defence of the Place.⁴ It is however His Majesty's pleasure that you should take these Works also under your direction, and I have acquainted Governor Chester that nothing of that Nature is to be undertaken or carried on in the Province, nor any Troops raised but by your Orders. The Governor also acquaints me that he had issued Commissions for raising two Provincial Corps. You will soon be able to form a Judgement whether it will be necessary to continue them on foot. If the War continues and you have Instructions from Sir Henry Clinton to undertake any Operations against the Rebellious Colonies they may be of Use, but if a Treaty takes place they will of course be disbanded.

I have only further to recommend to you to take every precaution to avoid disputes with or giving Occasion of Offence to the Subjects of Spain, or the Indians in Alliance with Us. At the same time it is the King's express Command that you do give all proper Protection and Countenance to His Majesty's faithful Subjects in carrying on their lawful Commerce, and in cultivating & improving their Lands. I am &c.

This copy was enclosed in Germain to Sir Henry Clinton, 1 Apr. 1779. No officer had been appointed by Clinton to command at West Florida when Germain wrote this letter; not until 27 Oct. was Brig. Gen. John Campbell appointed to the post. J. Barton Starr, Tories, Dons, and Rebels: The American Revolution in British West Florida (Gainesville, University of Florida, 1976), p. 130.

2. Fort Bute had been located at Manchac, West Florida.

3. That is, Capt. Thomas Hutchins.

4. In his letter to Germain of 26 Mar. 1778, Gov. Peter Chester had enclosed a letter from William Stiell, Alexander Dickson and William Johnstone charging that the works at Pensacola constructed in 1777 by Lt. Gov. Elias Durnford, who was engineer and surveyor for West Florida, had been built with improper materials leaving the garrison in a defenseless situation.

CAPTAIN WILLIAM JONES, CONTINENTAL MARINES, TO CAPTAIN ABRAHAM WHIPPLE, CONTINENTAL NAVY

Sir

I Had the Pleasure to hear of Your Health Yesterday by Cap^t Bennet & Last Evening by Your Letters to the officers—

Must Confess that I was Disappointed in hearing that we were not like to have Your Company to Conduct us & Join in Celebrating the The ever memorable 4 July.

Yet hope that you may Spend the day with Still Greater Satisfaction in Nants— Our affairs in the Ship go on with greatest Dispatch & Good Decorum But the want of our masts Lays us under Many Disadvantages for be asured that the Conduct of our Carpenters on Shore is intolerabl for there is not a Single Hoop on the mast^l

Yet—Methinks that if the almighty had been as Long making Such a number of frenchmen (As there are) as that they are finishing our mast, he might have had Business for ages yet to Come, and they would have been Somewhat Like other Parts of his workmanship It would Give me infinite Satisfaction if I Could make them Understand what I would Say, whereas talking has no Effect May he who Superintend the universe Deliver us from the hands Of those infernal Souls &c we are much in want of a Person whose thundrings would make these the worst of all gods Creation to Shudder—

I Mean not to Urge Your Coming Down by Any means, (but must tell you that your Company Would be Verry agreeable) and if there is any appearance Of it Beg You'd Excuse it—

I have nothing perticular more To Mention only beg you'd do me the favour to present my Compliments to Madame M^cArthy & the Gentleⁿ. And Ladies of my acquaintance that fall in Your way I Have the Honor to Remain [&c.]

1. No date is given; the editors arrived at this date because later in the letter Conyngham wrote that he had arrived at Tenerife "yesterday," and know, from others of his letters, that Conyngham left Cadiz on a 42 day cruise on 20 May.

2. Conyngham in the Continental Navy cutter Revenge captured the brig Betsey, John Murphy, master, on 12 Mar.; it was recaptured by the British armed ordnance ship Earl of Bathurst, Joseph Clapp, master, off the coast of America. Lloyd's Evening Post, 4–6 May 1778; UKLPR, H.C.A. 26/61, fol. 41; Letters and Papers of Gustavus Conyngham, opposite p. 152.

3. Snow Fanny, William St. Barbe, master, was captured on 13 Mar. Its prize master took it to Martinique where David H. Conyngham, Gustavus Conyngham's first cousin and agent, sold the vessel. Letters and Papers of Gustavus Conyngham, opposite p. 152.

4. Brig Carbonnere (Carboneer), Fabian Street, master, was captured on 18 or 19 Apr. In this letter, Conyngham appears to have crossed through Hornsby, the name of the prize master. However, in a list of prizes that Conyngham prepared in 1779, he notes that Carbonnere was "carried by Prize master Hornsby to Halifax." Ibid. See also, Journal of H.M. frigate Ambuscade, 11 June.

5. Countess of Morton—for so it was called by all the British sources—J. Orrick, master, a 110-ton brig built in 1767 and owned by the captain, was captured on 19 Apr. while on a voyage from Barcelona to Cowes, England, with a cargo of wine and fruit. The prize master sailed the ship to Martinique. Lloyd's Register of Ships, 1777–1778; Public Advertiser (London), 11 May; Letters and Papers of Gustavus Conyngham, pp. 149–50 and opposite p. 152.

6. Swedish brig Henrica Sophia, Peter Heldt, master. As seen later in this letter, Conyngham maintained that it was carrying British goods and therefore was subject to capture, a position which none of the governments involved, including that of the United States, upheld. It was retaken off Cape Cod. Arthur Lee to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, 15 Nov. 1778, in Letters and Papers of Gustavus Conyngham, pp. 149–50 and opposite p. 152.

7. Conyngham's letter of 6 Apr. to Jackson, Tracy & Tracy is in NDAR 12: 536.

8. Peace & Harmony, George Kennedy, master, was captured on 11 Mar. It did reach Boston and was libeled on 25 May in the Massachusetts Maritime Court of the Middle District for trial 10 June. See Libels Filed in the Massachusetts Maritime Court of the Middle District, 25 May, NDAR 12: 439–40.

9. In the "Narrative of the Proceedings of Captain Gustavus Conyngham, U.S.N." is the following: "here [at Tenerife] we learned that one of our prizes—Cargo Wine, fruit & Oyle, was at Island of Palma, the prize master was disposing of the Cargoe in League With the British Consul, We proceeded to s^d Island & found he had disposed of the Cargoe, a part delivered, took the Necessary steps, Got possession of the vessell & that part of Cargo on board, and thiss obliged to be satisfy^d—put a crew on board, ordered her to Martinique." "Narrative of Captain Gustavus Conyngham, U.S.N., While in Command of the 'Surprise' and 'Revenge,' 1777–1779," The Pennsylvania Magazine of History and Biography, 22 (1898): 483–84. From a letter from Graciano Sieulanne to Benjamin Franklin of 30 July 1778 (below), it appears that he replaced Fearson as prize master of Countess of Morton. Like Conyngham, Sieulanne called the brigantine Countess of Mouton.

CAPTAIN JOHN PAUL JONES, CONTINENTAL NAVY,
TO THE AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE

Copy of a Paper given into the Commissioners by Cap^t. Jones of the Ranger: July 3^d 1778.

Being informed from good Authority That the Minister² desired much to converse with me on a Subject of great Utility to the United States of America—as there was then no prospect of Obtaining permission to Sell the Prizes—or of getting the Prisoners exchanged soon—I thought it for the Intrest of the Service that I should come myself to Paris.—It was necessary too that some measure should be adopted to quiet the minds of the people in the Ranger.

The Minister told me this Plan—but demanded my Parole of Honor not to Reveal it to any person whatsoever—I am not therefore at liberty, to communicate it even to you; Unless you will first get me Absolved of my Parole—and also allow me to inform the Minister that it is What you have insisted upon knowing.

I can however Assure you that what has been communicated to me is perfectly consistent with my Duty as an American Officer—with the intrests of the United States—and with the most disintrested Friendship on the part of France—because tho it will contribute to the Success and Honor of the American Arms, it will involve America in no Expence.

The Opinion of the Minister is that the Success of his Plan depends on the most profound Secrecy in the meantime—and I shall at a proper Season give the most convincing proofs that it is not an affair of my Seeking—and also that my Journey to Paris has been Perfectly consistent with my Instructions from Congress and with my duty as an American Officer, acting from principle, and having the Satisfaction to know—that my past conduct has always been honored with the most Ample Approbation.

LIEUTENANT THOMAS SIMPSON, CONTINENTAL NAVY,
TO THE AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE

Gentlemen

Brest July 3^d –1778-

I am to Acknowledge the receipt of your favor from Passi of the third of last month,¹ for which, and your kind interposition in my behalf, I return you my most sincere thanks; Captain Jones has released me from Prison, and has permitted me to go for America, but holds me suspended until called upon by a court martial to meet him face to face: a copy of the Parole brought to me in the prison by Captain Jones, which I signed the evening before I was honoured with the receipt of your letter, I have hereunto annexed for your inspection.² Immediately on my release, I wrote M^r. Williams³ at Nantes whose clerk in his absence, answered, and informed me of several Vessels bound to Virginia, and South Carolina which places are at too great a distance from Portsmouth in New Hampshire, the place of my abode, especially as I have recieved no money since my being in the service for myself, and Servant, an able Seaman, who is now dead of his wound recieved in the action with the Drake,⁴ except about thirty eight crowns prize money for a brig sold in Nantes last winter,⁵ therefore cannot afford such a considerable expence. M^r Cutler⁶ wrote me that Captain Whipple had generously offered me a passage in the Providence, provided she was bound to the Northern States of America; I have since wrote Capt. Whipple and am now expecting his answer, holding myself ready to go immediately for Nantes, if necessary—⁷

Captain Niles arriving this morning, an express vessell in the continental service,⁸ with whom, if no other opportunity offers before his return, I can conveniently go and be very welcome, being a person known to me long since—I beg your Honours excuse for this trouble—a line in answer by the return of Captain Niles, or sooner, if your Honours think proper, will be conferring a further obligation, on Gentlemen—

FAIRHOLME & LUTHER TO BENJAMIN FRANKLIN

Sir

We took the liberty of writing you twice.—the last dated the 5th. Ult^o. advising the arrival here of an english prize¹ & the necessity there is of having some person Substituted here to act for Congress & at the Same time making bold to offer our Services for that purpose & also to give a Security if necessary and that you thought proper to empower us with that trust, Since which we are depriv'd of an answer—

The prize is Still here and we are really puzzled how to behave or act, The Admiralty informs us they have orders to Sequester all prizes brought into these ports & to detain them 'till further orders from Paris. Our Custom house also say they can't let the wine aShore till they hear from the farmers General, in what manner to receive the entry which 'till they get proper orders they look upon as being foreign wine in a brittish bottom, in vain have we applied to both those officers, ever since the first arrival of the Prize which is now a Month past but can get no Satisfactory ans^r which is the more necessary as the frigatt the Providence, at present at Pain Bœuf, is in want of her Men who are here with the prize. We therefore most earnestly request you'll be pleas'd to have that matter clear'd up, in Such a manner as to be a Standing rule for any prizes that may come here here after.² In expectation of the honour of your answer we remain [&c.]

CAPTAIN SAMUEL TUCKER, CONTINENTAL NAVY, TO THE AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE

Gentlemen

On Board the Boston. Lorient July 3^d. 1778.

These may Serve to acquaint your Honours of my arrival at this port, after a short Cruze of twenty four Days. while on the Cruze I took four Prizes one of which I sent for Boston in Charge of a Carefull Prize Master & seven Men she being a Brig from Venus her Cargo chiefly Medicine,¹ the others I Ordered for this Port, two of their Cargos fish the other Coles & Bottles, all of little Value.² I would inform your Honours the Reason I came in so soon was on Account of Cap^t. Alexander Murry in the Brig Saratoga from Baltimore that I spoke with June 25th in the Long^d. 25..00. West, who told me he had on Board many dispatches for your Honours in General & for the Court of France & many other Letters of Impotence to our States. I sent my Boat on Board he show'd them to my Officers & send me a Line or two, then I bore away to Conduct him Clear of the Cruzers in the Bay as far as I was able too, but unluckly on the 28th last att 10 AM. I saw a Sail to the Southward, I then haild Cap^t. Murry told him to steer his Course and I would overtake him in the Afternoon but could not come up with my Chase & loath to quit untill 5 PM then haul'd to the Northward for Cap^t. Murry, att 6 fell in with two Sail a Snow from Sweeden, and a Brig from Scotland, the former I past, the Latter I took, and by the Time I maned her it was very Dark. I went again in Pursuit of Cap^t. Murry & carried all the Sail I possible could to overtake him, when, coming in by Ushant I saw a Cutter of fourteen Guns coming from the Northward, gave her chase but could not come up with her, at Dark gave over Chase & made for Cap^t. Murry but had not the Good Fortune to see him after except I saw him Yesterday when I was coming in to the Eastward of me, & as he told me he was bound to Nantz I suppos'd it to be him, but was not so near as to be certain.³

Gentⁿ. M^t. Livingston my 2^d Lieu^t.—who presents this will give your Honours a just account of the Situation of my Ship in every respect whatever. his waiting on your Honours, prevents my Writing of many Circumstances as the Gentⁿ. will give you a just detail of the whole. Pray Gentlemen inform me if I must Carry the Prisoners to America.⁴ if I am to carry them I shall build a Prison in the forepart of my Ship, for them & some who I have Entered on Board, who has appeared very Disaffected on the Cruize & two I've on Board confined,⁵ When meeting Cap^t. Whipple or Jones will try them, or carry them to America in their present Situation.

I would inform your Honours that M^r. Livingston acted in the above state like a Good man & must confess I am very sorry to part with him, but his Health is so Imperfect I am sure he Cannot endure the Fatigues of a Cruize, and Especial in my Situation, he will be able to give you the best Acc^t. off.—⁶ I should be very glad to Accompany Cap^t. Whipple for my Future Cruze.—⁷ I am [&c.]

My Lord,

Cadiz 3^d July 1778

In my letter N^o. 18 I informed Your Lordship of the arrival in this Bay of a French Frigate and a Sloop of War they are directly from Brest.¹ the Frigate is called the Andromache commanded by the Chev^r. de Buor of 34 guns and 300 Men² the other the Ecureiuiil of 14 guns and 90 Men commanded by the Chev^r de Brugnon³ their business here is not only to protect and Serve as Convoys for their own Trade but they are to convoy the Ships belonging to the Rebellious Americans, which may be loading here for America. these Ships have not been admitted to Prattick here; only the Captain of the Frigate has been permitted to come on Shoar on a pretence of delivering a Message to the Governor.⁴

The Squadron commanded by the Marquis de Casa Tilly is daily expected to arrive from South America, with some money from Buenos Ayres.⁵

The Fleet under the command of Dⁿ Luis de Cordova are at their Moorings at the Puntales, they shew no appearance of fitting out for Service.⁶

The Convoy from England for Gibraltar and some Ships for this Place are in Sight I am [&c.]

4th. of July this Morning When we were turned Out, we fixed our Badges in Our hats,¹ which caused a Surprise, the Agent² Desired to see one of them, which was sent him, & it happen'd to be One that on the Top was Wrote in Capitals Independence, & on the bottom Liberty or Death, & he Not knowing the Meaning there of, Was Surprised, & Concluded we were agoing to force the Guards, in Order to Regain Our Liberty, therefore Order'd a Double Centry at y^c. gate, & Immediately sent an Express to the Gen^l & Adm^l. Shuldham,³ & made a great Stir, & to his Disgrace as it caused much Laughter—it passed on till One o'Clock When we formed in 13 Divisions (Bro^t. Over[]) Each Gave 3 Cheers till it Came to the 13th, when Each Division Joined the 13th. and gave a General Huzza, which was done with the Greatest Regularity & Order that Could be Expected, we kept Our Colours flying while the Sun set then Hawled them down thus Ended the Day

THE JOURNAL OF ARTHUR LEE

[Passy, France]

4th [July 1778]- M^r. Adams informd me that Mes^{rs} Chaumont¹ & Williams² had brought Cap^t. Jones³ to him & proposd that the Commissioners shoud request Mons^r. de Sartine⁴ to Let Cap^t. Jones enter on board the Brest fleet as a volunteer. That he rejected it. D^r. F.⁵ coming in M^r. L.⁶ said it woud set a most pernicious example that an Officer in the public service shd quit his post without leave, stay here, in defiance of his orders intriguing to get into another service. D^r. F. excused it, said we were not certain he was going to, not know^s that M^r. A⁷ had told me what Mes^r. Chaumont & Williams had proposed but upon his repeat^s it y^c. D^r. was silent. However he made an excuse of not hav^s Cap^t. Jones's instructions to see how far he was under our orders, for pospon^s the proposition I made that we shd order him to his ship immediately.

Mem^d. Soon after M^r. Adams arrivd, M^r. L. proposd that they shd join in a Letter to M^r. Grand the Banker⁸ forbidding him to pay any of the public money but to their joint order, to w^{ch} D^r. F. wd. not agree saying he did not know but M^r. Lee might starve him, & that M^r. L. kept all the spanish funds to himself. Upon his disagreeing the measure was dropt.

CAPTAIN JOHN PAUL JONES, CONTINENTAL NAVY, TO THE AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE

Gentlemen

Passy July 4th. 1778

When Congress thought proper to Order me to France it was proposed that the Ranger should remain under my direction and be Commanded by a Lieutenant—and as the French Ministry have now in contemplation Plans which promise Honor to the American Flag, the Ranger might be very Useful to Assist in carrying them into execution.¹

Lieutenant Simpson has certainly behaved amiss; yet I can forgive as well as resent—and upon his making a proper Concession, I will with your Approbation, not only pardon the past—but leave him the Command of the Ranger.—² By this means, and by some little promotions and Attentions that may be consistent, I hope to be able to satisfy the Rangers Crew so that they will postpone thier return as long as the Service may require.³ I have the Honor to be [&c.]

LIEUTENANT THOMAS SIMPSON, CONTINENTAL NAVY, TO CAPTAIN ROBERT NILES, CONNECTICUT NAVY

Captain Niles

Brest 4th July 1778.

On your arrival at Paris you may perhaps have an opportunity of being in company with their Honors the Commissioners, when if convenient I shou’d be much Obliged to you, if consistent, to inform them of what you may have heard of the ill treatment I have unjustly received of C^a. Jones, that nevertheless for the sake of peace, and that such scandalous behaviour of a Continental Captain shou’d not be made public in a foreign country;¹ when Captain Jones after my release appeared desirous to withdraw, and Settle matters, I wou’d have gladly done it, and proposed it in this manner Viz. That if he (Captⁿ. Jones) wou’d give me liberty to return to America and a letter for that purpose, there to go into the Service of my country I shou’d drop all that had passed—But he ungenerously² desired on the other hand a letter from me acknowledging that my behaviour had given him reason to treat me in the manner he had, done, and to induce me to such a base act as to lie again myself even promised me a command, on my refusal declared that he wou’d do every thing possible against me, his utmost efforts for that purpose I despise

THÉODORE JAUGE TO WILLIAM TEMPLE FRANKLIN

Bordeaux Le 4 Juillet 1778.

Je ne vous ai point donné de mes nouveau mon cher Monsieur depuis mon retour dans ce païs ci faute d'occasion, cela que je prend aujourd'hui est affligeante pour moi, mais elle sera autant plus propre a fixer votre attention et celle de votre grand Papa.¹ Depuis un an ou 18 mois on a considerablement expédié des navires pour L'Amérique septentrional, la plus grande partie sont peris ou ont été pris par la faute de vos Pilotes, Ils vient de nous arriver un evenement affreux, un de nos navires avoit atterré a la Baye d'albemard un peu sous le vend de la passe ou il ne reste que 5 pieds d'eau, il etoit mouillé a 7 Brasses, Il envoya sa chaloupe a terre pour se procurer un Pilote quelque prix qu'on lui a proffert il n'a jamais voulu se rendre a bord. le lendemain Ils apperçurent une fregatte qui venoit droit a eux, Ils n'eurent d'autre party a prendre que de couper leur Cable & d'aller a la Côte, & ils se Sauverent comme ils purent la fregatte envoya ses chaloupes bien armées & enlèverent ce qu'ils purent & mirent le feu au Navire, si ce malheureux pilote avoit voulu se rendre a bord, Il nous auroit evité cette perte qui est considerable, cetoit un Battiment de 300 tonneaux très richement chargé.

Nous en avons egalement perdu un autre bien malheureusement, Il etoit poursuivi depuis 24 par 3 fregattes qui ne purent pas atteindre, Il entra avant elles dans la Bay de Chasepeak, Il se crut sauvé après avoir gagné 4 a 5 lieux, mais Il trouva a son passage dans la Baye un vaisseau de 64 Cannon et deux fregattes qui l'obligerent d'amener. Il a été conduit a Newyork² Il est enverité très Interessant que vous ecrivies de faire punir les pilotes qui se refusent de preter du secours a nos Battiments, Il y beaucoup de monde qui assurent qu'ils s'entendent avec les Royalistes, et enverité je serois très porté a le croire.

Comment ménagé vous nos Jolies demoiseles vous envoyas quelque fois chez Mr. Grand de bien Interessantes. adieu mon cher monsieur [&c.]

[Translation]

I have not sent you any of my news, my dear Sir, since my return to this country lacking the occasion. The news I report today is distressing for me, but it should fix your attention and that of your Grandfather.¹ For a year or 18 months a considerable number of ships have been sent to North America, the majority of which have been lost or have been taken through the fault of your Pilots. A shocking instance has just happened to us. One of our ships had grounded in Albemarle Sound, a little to the windward of the pass where there was only five feet of water. It had anchored in seven fathoms. It sent its boat ashore to procure a Pilot, at whatever price offered to him he never agreed to come on board. The next day they saw a frigate that came right toward them. They could do nothing else but cut their Cable and run on shore, & they saved themselves as they could. The frigate sent its boats well armed & carried off what they could and set the ship on fire. If this unhappy pilot had agreed to come on board, it would have saved us from this loss, which is considerable. It was a Ship of 300 tons, very richly laden.

We have likewise lost another unfortunately. It was chased for 24 [hours] by 3 frigates, which were unable to seize it. It entered Chesapeake Bay before them. It believed itself saved after having gained 4 to 5 leagues, but it found in its passage in the Bay a 64-gun ship of the line and two frigates, which forced it to surrender. It was taken to New York.² It is very important that you write to have the pilots punished who refuse to assist our Ships. Many people are sure that they are in league with the Royalists, and in truth I would be very prone to believe it.

I am very interested in how you are faring with the Pretty damsels whom you met at Mr. Grand's. Good bye, my dear Sir [&c.]

ARTHUR LEE TO JOHN ADAMS

Dear Sir

Challiot July 5th. 1778

I enclose you my Copy of Cap^t Jones's Instructions.¹ My opinion is that in quitting his Ship without our leave or orders was a breach of his duty—that his continuing here after receiving his orders is a still more flagrant breach of his duty—that we shall be justly blamd, if we do not give him immediate & preemprory orders to proceed to his duty & compel obedience to them.

You will see by the enclod Acc^t from M^r Grand, that not only M^r Williams's drafts have been paid before his Accounts are settled without our orders; but that he has been drawing & giving Mandates since his being here, as if he were a Commissioner, which are also paid without our knowledge or Order.² It seems we are only Commissioners for the responsible part, while M^r Chaumont³ and M^r Williams are to plan operations for the Captains of continent^l. Ships & to spend the money for w^{ch}. we are to answer. These things must be checked, or it is easy to see where they will end. I am not well enough to come to Passi to-day, but will see you to-morrow. If the Order for Cap^t Jones & the Letter for M^r Schweighauser are made out to-day, they can be sent to me to sign.⁴ I shall be obligd to you to send me the charges you promisd me against the conduct of my Secretary.⁵ If they appear of consequence, he shall either answer them, or quit me. Adieu

A. Lee

2. The accounts of Rodolphe-Ferdinand Grand covering the period 30 Mar. to 30 June 1778 are printed in Adams Papers 6: 2–6. Those accounts indicate that Jonathan Williams Jr., had received 114,281.14.11 livres.

3. That is, Jacques-Donatien Le Ray de Chaumont.

4. Neither an order to Jones nor a letter to Jean-Daniel Schweighauser for this date has been found.

5. The charges, that Lee's secretary, John Thornton, either was a British spy or at the very least was using privileged information he had access to as Lee's secretary to gain financial advantage on the British stock market, originated with Dr. Edward Bancroft, secretary to the American Commissioners, who made them to Adams. Although Thornton was guilty as charged, Bancroft, the accuser, was himself guilty of parallel charges. For the charges and Lee's note concerning their origin, see DNA, PCC, item 83, vol. 1, p. 261 (M247, roll 110).

CAPTAIN JOHN PAUL JONES, CONTINENTAL NAVY, TO GABRIEL DE SARTINE

Passy July 5th. 1778.—

Plan for Expeditions.—

As the first proposed plan will be impeded for some time¹ in the interval a great

Variety of projects present themselves; some of which might be adapted, and might prove of a great Utility to France and America, by distressing their Common Enemy at a small Expence.—

Three very fast Sailing Frigates with one or two tenders might enter the Irish Channell and Burn at Whitehaven from two to three hundred Ships, besides the Town which Contains Fifty thousand Inhabitants:—this alone would render it extremely difficult, If not Impossible to Supply Ireland with Coal the ensuing Winter.—

The same Force would be sufficient to take the Bank of Air² in Scotland and to destroy the Town—or perhaps the whole Shipping in the Clyde might be destroyed with the Towns and Stores of Greenock and Port Glasgow; provided no Alarm were first given at other places—The Fishery at Camletown³ is an object worth Attention—and in some of the Ports of Ireland Ships might perhaps be found Loaded with linnen, worth from 150,000 to £200,000 Sterling each.—

It might perhaps be equally expedient to Alarm Britain on the East side—which might be effected with equal or perhaps an Inferior Force by destroying the Coal Shipping of New Castle &c^c which would occasion the utmost distress for Fuel in London; and there are many Towns of Consequence on the East and North Coasts of England and Scotland which are defenceless, and might be either burnt or laid under Contribution.— The Success of any of these or the like Enterprizes on the Coast of Britain will depend on Surprizing well, and on dispatch both in the Attack and in the Retreat, Therefore it is necessary that the Ships should Sail remarkably fast and that their force should be Sufficient to Repel any of the Enemies Cruizing Frigates two of which may perhaps be meet with at Once.—

It is scarcely conceivably how great a panic the Success in any one of these projects would occasion in England—It would convince the World that their Coasts are Vulnerable—and would Consequently hurt their public Credit

If Alarming the Coast of Britain should be thought unexpedient; to intercept the Enemies West India or Baltic Fleets—or their Hudsons Bay Ships—or to destroy their Greenland Fishery are Capital Objects, which promise Success if well Adopted; and any one of them might be furnished before the first can take place:—

par l'appas d'une forte récompense, à empoisonner dans une pièce d'eau la plus grande partie de l'équipage, le reste étant du complot. Une fois maître du bâtiment, ils devoient le conduire à Londres; heureusement ce scélérat a été découvert, au moment où il exécutoit son affreuse commission. “The American frigate the Boston,¹ armed with 32 guns, which was for two months in the port of Bordeaux, left a few days ago with a considerable crew, composed of a great number of volunteers. National hatred has carried the English to an infamous conspiracy.² They hoped that the treachery would avenge them, rather than attack us according to the laws of war. They engaged the frigate's cook, by the enticement of a considerable reward, to poison in a barrel of water the largest part of the crew, the rest being in the conspiracy. Once master of the ship, they were to sail it to London; happily this villain was discovered at the moment he was executing his frightful commission. Continental Agent

P.S.

Since the above I have received a letter from M^r Moylan² I write to him by the present occasion & doubt not but my letter will be sufficient to convince him of the extent of my Comission—he has kindly inclosed me your letter to him³ by which I see your intention of coming here to join Cap Whipple as you might now be ready to leave lorient & knowing you have been thoroughly supplied at Bordeaux I have resolved not to go or send any body as my above Correspondents will equally advantageously dispose of your Prizes.

I long to have the honour of seing you here to assure you how sincerely I am—as above—

Hon^d. Gentlemen

I had the honor of writing to you fully the 5th ins^t,¹ to which I beg leave to refer you. M^r. Amiel having granted to the people who were the occasion of his Journey to Dunkirk, as much time as they required to employ all their resources to Execute the project they laid before you, and their endeavours proving fruitless, he at last determined to deliver me your much respected favour of 26. ult^{mo}.² was I not afraid of being too intruding up on your patience, and was I not withheld, by that principal which binds us to return good for Evil, I should give you a full account of the proceedings of the people who endeavour'd to impose up on you, and to wrong me, but there is something So Extraordinary in their conduct that the issue of the affair will Sufficiently plead my Excuse for obmitting to say any thing more in my Justification. I leave to Capⁿ. Amiel to explain every thing to you, and if after all, any doubt should remain wether I merit your confidence and favours, I humbly beg you would aford me an opportunity of satisfying my most Sanguine wishes to convince you, and the world, that those who have had the baseness to endeavour to wrong me in the dark, have not courage enough to Justify themselves in the middle of day.³

The Commission, Instructions & Bond, mention'd in your letter, to my great Sorow, being now useless, I return you the Same here inclosed, and beg you would be pleased to acknowledge the receipt thereof.

Since you are pleased to leave to me to Settle with the Surgeon⁴ you may rely on my Exertions to do it to your Satisfaction, per my next I shall forward to you their receipt.

as you Seem to approve the articles of intelligence I now and then take the liberty to give you, I shall Sease every opportunity to transmit them to America, and I beg you would be pleased to mention wether I may address them directly to Congress, or to your Correspondents in the different ports of the united states.⁵ I this day write to Mess^{rs}. Simeon Deane & C^{ic}. James River, by a vessell which will Sail to morrow, that one Capⁿ. Hyde Christiaen of the Vigilantiâ of Amsterdam which arrived here yesterday from Portsmouth, from which place he sail'd the 3. ins^t in the evening reports that on the Same day he Saw the Crews of the two frigats la Licorne & *la Palas*⁶ and of two other french vessells which were carry'd in there, conducted to prison, and that Admiral Keppels Squadron which has been reinforced by Seven Ships amo^s now to 30 Ships of the line besides frigats was ready to proceed to Sea with the first fair wind to meet the French Squadron which was Expected to sail from Brest; this leaves no doubt of the hostile vews of the common Ennemy. the Captain who made this report, Said to me that it may be rely'd on, & that he was ready to affirm it. The event will soon prove it.

There are no vessells at present in this harbour bound to Brest or to Nantes, but I Expect one will be put up soon for the latter place, by which agreable to your orders I shall send the american Seamen which are now here, but as it is generally believed, that the English will soon begin to take the french ships, I am afraid these poor people who have had enough allready of the English Jails, may fall again in the hands of their Ennemys; and as they all Seem desirous of being employed, and it is probable that in case any hostilities of that kind being committed by the English, Some privateers will immediately be fitted out from this port; would it not be better to keep them a few days longer 'till matters are clear'd up? if your opinion should be otherwise, I beg you would mention it, as I foresee that I may receive your answer before any vessell will Sail from Nantes &^{ca.7}

The value I set upon your benevolence & favours, shall make me very anxiously and impatiently wait your answer, whether Poreau's perfidious insinuations have made any impression to my prejudice on your mind, if they have, I beg for God's sake Gentlemen you will aford me an oportunity to convince you of their falshood; I rely so much upon your Justice, that I am persuaded you'll not deny me that Satisfaction, in Expectation of which I have the honnor to remain [&c.]

Dunkirk 7th. July 1778.

Fran^s. Coffyn

L, PPAmP, Benjamin Franklin Papers, vol. 10, fol. 99. Addressed below close: "The H^{ble}. D^e. Bⁿ Franklin, Arthur Lee & John Adams Esq^{rs} at Passy." Docketed: "Francis Coffyn/Dunkirk 7 July 78."

1. Coffyn's letter has not been found.

2. See the American Commissioners to Coffyn, 26 June, above, where the mission of Peter Amiel is discussed.

3. On the same day, the "people" that Coffyn referred to here, the principals of the merchant firm of Poreau, Mackenzie & Cie, wrote to the commissioners explaining their failure to provide a privateer for Amiel as promised. They charged that Amiel, "occupied with the glory that, in his own mind, he was born to win," refused command of the privateer they had chosen because it carried only "four cannons and twelve swivel-guns." Amiel demanded a much larger vessel, but that would have cost double the 30 or 40 thousand livres the firm was willing to risk. Amiel "refused us the commission that was meant for us" and then divulged to Coffyn, "an English courtier," information that the firm had confided to the commissioners. PPAmP, Benjamin Franklin Papers, vol. 10, no. 100. The letter is in French; a translation can be found in Adams Papers 6: 270–71. Concerned that his reputation had been damaged by Poreau and Mackenzie, Coffyn wrote the commissioners again on 9 July enclosing testimonials on his behalf from French governmental officials at Dunkerque. PPAmP, Benjamin Franklin Papers, vol. 10, no. 103.

4. Concerning the "Surgeon," see Coffyn to the American Commissioners, 18 June, above.

5. In their reply of 13 July, the commissioners directed that if Coffyn sent "News" to America, he should address it to James Warren at Boston or to the Committee for Foreign Affairs in Congress. Sending English newspapers would "be always acceptable" but when forwarding other intelligence, Coffyn should "observe one Rule, which is, not to write any News to America that is not well authenticated, because there are so many Misrepresentations floating about in the World, that if these were written as they occur, to a distant Country, they would tend to confound and mislead the People." MHi, Adams Papers.

6. On the capture of the French Navy frigates Licorne and Pallas, see Louis XVI to Comte D'Orvilliers, 28 June, above.

7. The American Commissioners also replied on 13 July that they wished these American seamen to be "put into some Employment" as soon as possible so they can "earn their Bread and save Expenses to their Country." They were "indifferent" whether it was at Dunkerque, Brest, or Nantes. MHi, Adams Papers.

REPORT FROM THE BRITISH ADMIRALTY OFFICE

Admiralty Office, July 8.

Captain Bryne, of this Majesty’s ship the Andromeda, in his letter to Mr. Stephens, gives an account, that on his voyage from the River Delawar, on the 31st of May he fell in with and took the Angelica privateer from Boston, mounting 16 guns, six pounders, and carrying 98 men, and that after taking out the hands he set the ship on fire.¹

A letter has been received at the Admiralty Office, from Admiral Young, giving an account of an additional number of captures made by him since his last dispatches; many of the ships and cargoes of great value.²

Sir George Collier, in the Rainbow, by himself, and in company with other vessels, has taken no less than forty-three prizes, and several of them large ships, and of value, during his station in America.

So plenty are Seaman in America, that all the ships on that station are full manned. Lord Howe’s ship the Eagle has 150 more than her complement.³

Lloyd’s Evening Post, 8–10 July 1778.

1. The letter from Capt. Henry Bryne of H.M. frigate Andromeda to Philip Stephens, Secretary of the Admiralty, has not been found. See Heathcote Muirson to Benjamin Franklin, 21 July 1778, below, on the brig’s capture.

2. See A List of Vessels taken by the Squadron Under Command of Vice Admiral [James] Young at Barbadoes & Leeward Islands 14 March 1778, NDAR 11: 644–45.

3. As seen in the letter from Vice Admiral Viscount Howe to Philip Stephens, 6 July, above, this report was greatly exaggerated.

LONDON

A Captain of a ship from New-York, who left that place the beginning of May, says, there were 1100 Rebel Seamen on board the prison ships, and that the Masters of British Merchantmen were allowed to go on board and engage any number of them, to work their ships, which they might stand in need of.

The Diana, Colley, from Africa for America, is taken and carried into Martinico.¹

The Derby, Rimmer, from Africa for America, that was taken and carried into Martinico, is since retaken and carried into Dominica. . . .²

This morning advice was received, that the Levant, a Letter of Marque, Captain Martin, belonging to Bristol, has been out cruising, and has sent into Bristol three prizes that he took on the American coast.³

This morning an express was sent to Portsmouth, with orders to Admiral Keppel immediately to sail for the Bay.⁴

The Lynx, Capt. David, from Nantz to Virginia, with salt and bale goods, is taken by the Beazely Letter of Marque. She proves to be French property, and is carried into Jersey.⁵

The Stafford, Hicks, from South Carolina, to Nantz, with rice, indigo, and tobacco, is taken and carried into Fyal.

Advice is received from New York, that a French ship of 400 tons burthen, laden with double-headed grape, and small shot, and several hundred bales of woollen cloth, is taken by his Majesty's cutter the Delight, and carried into the above port.⁶

The Crown privateer, of 32 guns, belonging to Salem, being seen cruising about the Leeward Islands in April last, a Letter of Marque from Antigua went out in chase of her, and after a smart engagement, took and carried her into Antigua.⁷

1. Ship Diana, J. Colly, master, 130 tons burthen, built in Liverpool in 1768 and new upper works added in 1777. It carried 12 4-pounders and was owned by J. Dobson. Lloyd's Register of Ships, 1777-1778.

2. Ship Derby, J. Rimmer, master, 160 tons burthen, built in Liverpool in 1774, armed with 14 4-pounders and owned by Yates & Co. Ibid.

3. Privateer ship Levant, Capt. John Martin, commanding. On 2 March the New York Gazette and Weekly Mercury reported the arrival at New York on 26 February of Levant, of 28 Guns and 125 Men. It also reported that Levant sailed from Bristol on 18 July 1777 en route to Grenada.

4. Adm. the Hon. Augustus Keppel. On 13 June 1778, his fleet sailed in order to take station in the waters off Brest (the Bay of Biscay) with orders to prevent the junction of the Brest and Toulon squadrons of the French Navy. James, The British Navy in Adversity, p. 123.

5. Ship Bazely Brigg, Noah Gautier, commanding, 140 tons burthen, built in America and operating out of the Island of Jersey. It was owned by Matthew Gosset & Co. and carried 14 4-pounders, 2 6-pounders, 12 swivel guns and a crew of 100 men. Lloyd's Register of Ships, 1777-1778; UKLPR, HCA 26/62/85. Lynx, François David, commanding, was a French vessel bearing a letter of marque. UKLPR, HCA 32/392/32.

6. No confirming evidence has been found for this report. It may have been a garbled account of the capture of Vicomte de Veaux. See Journal of H.M.S. St. Albans, 23 Feb. 1778, NDAR 11: 415 and n.; and Rivington's The Royal Gazette, 21 Mar. 1778, NDAR 11: 749-50 and n.

7. Neither the Salem privateer nor its captor has been identified.

LIEUTENANT MUSCO LIVINGSTON TO CAPTAIN SAMUEL TUCKER

Dear Sir

Paris 8^h. July 1778-

at Last, I am in Paris, after a very disagreeable Journey of four days; having been very Unwell Most of the way, bad Roads bad horses, & worse Shaize. I have this day, been with the Commissioners, who are perfectly Satisfied, with all that you have done. M^r Adams¹ particularly, Inquired after you, & Laughed; heartily at your Intention, Caring an answer, back; to the Mesage you Came about. they think a great deal of Our Cruise; indeed More than we did our Selves—they tell Me you will Either Joine Cap^t Whipple or proceed Immediately to America I wish I was Certain of which you wou'd Chuse² I have Recommended, the taking all your Ballast out & giving the Ship Lead Ballast which they approve off, as the Lead is wanted much in a Merica; I hope this will be agreeable to you.

& a piece of Newse I am Shure will please you, is, that all your prisoners will be Exchanged= in consequence of which I have Given in, a Guess, at the Numbers, as well as the qualitie, of the prisoners on board as it was wanted Immediately to Send to England, So that in all probability you will Very Soon git the Exchange in your Favour & is as follows—4 Captains 4 Mates & thirty Seven foremast Men; the Reason I gave in So many formastmen, is that I heard you Say, you would Exchange all the *Marthey*³ people; I Beg you will, for your Own peace of Minde, Exchange evry man you have, that is not americans; you had better Send a particular acc^t of those you would wish to Exchange with their Names & Ranks, as Soon as you Can, as it May be wanted, directly. it gave me much pleasure to See, that the Commissn was So well pleased with our Little Cruise & perfectly Satisfied with what you had don; I have been Asked many questions, & have, I hope, given full Satisfaction, to them, as well as you; I do not know when they will dispatch me, as all great people you know, take much time, to do business, but the Minit they are Ready I shall Sett out= you will be Also happy to hear that General how,⁴ has quited Phild^a & that the paltery Remains of the Army of Murderers, are Shut up in New York, from whence I hope they will Very Soon be Routed the poore Doctor⁵ is Broke out a Fresh & Shews a face as Long, & Lank, as your Arm; he tells me, booger the Chaize & the Road, they have made him worse than ever, So that you may Expect to See him Return in a prety Pickle. MARINE CAPTAIN RICHARD PALMES TO CAPTAIN SAMUEL TUCKER

On Board the Boston, Port Lewis,¹
8th July 1778

Sir

By Sergeant White's Report of this day made to me in writing. I find the following marines under my command guilty of neglect and absolutely refusing to do duty as centinalls on board your Ship. In so refusing they have both forfeited wages and prize money, according to Resolve of Congress, made for the Regulation of the American Navy, & I do not think it for the peace & safety of this Ship, to keep them on board, you being Sensible the French in General here, are not disposed to serve us. If the American marines was to act as centinalls only & be exempted from other of the ships duty, we should be in peace, they consist of 1 Serj^t— 2 Corp^s: 1 Drum: 12 Privates. their duty at present having 6 centerys will be two hours on and two off—² I am ready at the risque of my life to render you every thing for your peace and comfort, your commands are always a pleasure for me to obey and your orders how to proceed will oblige Your most Hum^{ble} Serv^t

JAMES MOYLAN TO THE AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE

Honorable Gentlemen

L'Orient 8 July 1778

The day before yesterday two of Captain Tuckers¹ prizes arrived here, one of w^{ch} is loaded wth. 1400 Quintals of Dry'd Cod Fish,² the other with Twenty Chaldron of Coals & seventy Gross of empty Bottles.³ both these prizes are Brigs, one of w^{ch} is of very little value, but the other is a new vessel. as no application cou'd yet be made from M^r Schweighauser, and it being necessary to make their Declaration at the Custom house & Admiralty, I passed them through these different ceremonys as vessels belonging to Portsmouth in N. England, in order to avoid the detention that wou'd be given them if declared as prizes. I have wrote M^r Schweighauser of Nantes to inform me whether his appointment extends to this port, on rec^t of his answer, if I find it do's, I will deliver to his order those prizes &c. if I shou'd not in the mean time receive different orders from you, as the steps I have already taken regarding them proceeds only from a desire of being of some use⁴

The jealousys subsisting between Cap: Tuckers officers & the french part of his crew, have got to the disagreeable height of being obliged to come before the Admiralty, however I am in hopes matters will be soon reconciled.— the Admiralty desire all they can to facilitate it.⁵ I have the honor to be [&c.]

1. Captain Samuel Tucker, commander of Continental Navy frigate Boston.

2. Brig Elizabeth.

3. Unidentified Scottish brig.

4. Jean-Daniel Schweighauser sent Samuel Tucker a letter on 5 and 6 July laying out "the extent" of his authority and informing Tucker that a L'Orient merchant named Puchelberg would handle the disposition of the prizes. EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM GLASGOW, JULY 9

"This day se'nnight arrived at Port Glasgow, the brigantine New Friends, of Charles Town, South Carolina, a prize sent in by the Leveller Letter of Marque, Capt. Dunlop. She was taken on the 14th ult. lat. 44.45. long. 7. 30.W under French colours, commanded by a Mr. Burch, and is laden with salt and bale goods, for North or South-Carolina.¹

"On Friday last the Leveller also arrived at the above port, saw a large fleet off Cape Ortegal, on the 15th ult. under convoy of the Boston American privateer,² which gave chase to the Leveller, having observed her speaking to some of the fleet. Two French frigates had likewise formed part of the convoy, but had returned.

"A day before the above brig sailed from Bourdeaux, a ship had arrived there with 500 hogshheads of tobacco from Charles Town, and a few days before that a large vessel with rice and indigo."

Lloyd's Evening Post, 13–15 July 1778.

1. In its edition of 10–13 July, Lloyd's Evening Post reported that the privateer sloop Leveller, Capt. William Dunlop, commander, had captured a brig bound for Charleston with a cargo of salt and bale goods valued at upwards of £2000.

2. This may be referring to the Continental Navy frigate Boston, Capt. Samuel Tucker, commander. In mid-June, Boston was cruising in the waters off southwest France; however, according to its journal, Boston on 15 June was in the Bay of Biscay, not near Cape Ortegal, nor is there any mention of an encounter with a British privateer.

THE HIBERNIAN CHRONICLE (CORK), FROM MONDAY, JULY 6, TO THURSDAY, JULY 9, 1778

The Patience, Moor,¹ from Dublin to Drontheim,² is taken by an American privateer, and carried into Brest.

The Lovely Lass, Ward,³ from London to North America, is taken and carried into Boston.

The Sarah, Newby, a letter of marque of 16 guns, from Dartmouth to Newfoundland, is taken by two American privateers.⁴

1. Brig Patience, W. Moore, master, 160 tons burthen, built in Chester in 1772, and owned by the captain. Lloyd's Register of Ships, 1777–1778. The captor was Continental Navy ship Ranger, Capt. John Paul Jones.

2. Drontheim, is Trondheim, Norway.

3. Ship Lovely Lass, Andrew Waid, master, built in the Thames River in 1753; lengthened and had major repairs done in 1773, 1774, and 1776. It carried 4 3-pounders and 4 6-pounders, was owned by Mr.

Montgomery, and was on a voyage to the Grenadines, British West Indies, when captured by Connecticut privateer sloops American Revenue and Revenge. Lloyd's Register of Ships, 1777–1778; Capt. This Day very pleasent Weather, finished cleaning the Ships Bottom. M^r Latuche one of his Christian Majestys Generals at Lorient,¹ with a number of Officers came on Board the Ship, and asked the french Sailors & Marines in my presence, weather they had reather tarry on board or go on shore, they answered go on shore, as they entered as Volentears; by they signed the Ships Book as Seamen & Marines, notwithstanding which, tho I showed him the Book, he took 47 out of the Ship & threatned to write to the Commissioners at Parris, about Lieu^r Reed & Bates treating the Frenchmen ill; which was false for they have been treated on Board the Ship better if possible then the Americans.—² The General did not behave to me on Board my Ship with all the politeness that could be expected from one of his Rank, however I shall Write the Commis: the whole of his proceedings³

WILLIAM HODGE TO THE AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE

Honble Gentlemen

Cadiz July 10th. 1778

By Yesterdays Post I had the honor of receiving your Letter of the 19th of April.¹ What could have occasioned its not reaching my hands before now, I cannot say unless the Person who was entrusted with sending it by the Post might have detained it to answer some particular purpose. You inform me in your letter that I am charged in your Bankers Account with upwards of one hundred thousand livres of the public Money for which there is no account from me among the Papers left by M^r Deane. I have the happiness to inform you that I not only gave to M^r Deane an account of what Money I received, aside of what I paid, but likewise the Accounts of my Merchants at Dunkirk, nay, my Bills, even to the minutest article furnished the two small Vessels that I fitted out at Dunkirk.² I have likewise the honor to inform you, that in all the charges I have brought against the two Vessels you will not find a single one made by myself, unless the poor trifling 2½ ₤ Cent (which did not half pay my expences attending the fatiguing job I had during my stay at Dunkirk) the charges being all made by the Merchants who I was ordered to employ, and who produced me the Accounts of every tradesman, which I gave into M^r Deane's hands. I should not be thus particular was not your letter full of insinuations respecting my honesty which I look upon as ungenerous, and which I will prove to be without foundation. I have double receipts for every farthing of Public Money that I received at Dunkirk, of consequence there can be no mistake in regard of the sum which I have received. I Shall inclose you for your satisfaction Gentlemen, the accounts of the Monies I received, and of what I paid; by which you will find that there was a balance due me, as I was only accountable for one quarter of the Cutter, the other quarter belongs to Mess^{rs}. Conyngham and Deane, for which M^r Deane was accountable.³ It is very probable that M^r Deane has taken all the papers relative to the Cutter and Lugger with him, as neither D^r Franklin nor M^r Lee would have any thing to say to the two little Expeditions from Dunkirk, of consequence M^r Deane think of himself accountable to the Congress, he would undoubtedly take all the Accounts with him.

I have it from the very best authority that Mr. A. Lee has wrote to Congress and informed them that I had received Large sums of public Money, and that he could not learn to what use it was converted.⁴ It is true that I had received some public monies, but as M^r Lee complained that he could not get sufficient for his expences, private persons were obliged to make use of their Money, as there was not sufficient of the public's for the purpose intended.⁵ I blush when I think of the Congress being concerned with private Persons in an armed Vessel, but M^r Lee has wrote to all his correspondents in Spain, that the Congress and I was concerned in a small Privateer, & that in case of any Prizes coming into Spain, they should only pay me one half of the Prize Money: the other half to be remitted to him at Paris;⁶ not considering that this Crew wanted their part, besides the great expence attending armed Vessels. I am not a stranger, Gentlemen, to the little disputes that have happened at Paris, Nantes, and elsewhere since I left France, and I am sorry that I am like to make one of the number, all owing to a certain Gentleman⁷ whose characteristic is that of being a dissatisfied, troublesome Man.

I shall now Gentlemen give you an account of my conduct since my arrival in Spain. As to my claim of the Cutter as the property of M^r John Ross and myself, I made it from the best authority, as it was in consequence of an Order given me by Silas Deane Esq^r: a Gentleman equally empowered (at the time in matters respecting public business as yourselves) I am greatly surprized to find D^r Franklins' name at the bottom of your letter, as his honor not only gave his consent, but advised M^r Deane to dispose of the Cutter in the manner he has done. This I know to be the case as I seen M^r Deane speaking to D^r Franklin upon the subject. Gentlemen, As M^r Deane has made over to M^r Ross and myself all right and title to the Cutter, which we have from under his own hand, he gave Captain Conyngham orders to deliver the aforesaid Vessel up entirely to our management, and to put himself under our directions, which he has done, and still intends to do, as both he and myself act from good authority, and in case of any bad consequences, M^r. Deane and not us that are accountable.⁸

D^r. Franklin and M^r. Deane gave this Vessel up into our hands, as great expences was likely to be incurred, as well as much trouble to the Commissioners. She being upward of two thirds of her time in Port before my arrival in Spain. The Merchant at Corunna⁹ has acted from the same authority as Captain Conyngham from whom I received a sum of Money which was by no means sufficient to pay the Peoples Wages and their part of the Prize Money. I have likewise received other Monies which I have paid to the Officers and Crew, but still it has not been sufficient to satisfy them, as they have insisted on their part of all Prizes they have taken, altho the greatest part of the N^t. Proceeds of Prizes has been stopped in Spain, in consequence of Captain Conynghams' unfortunately taking a French Brig from London and sent into S^t. Sebastian.¹⁰ As to my assuming to myself the produce of Prizes, I declare it to be false, and without the least foundation, for I do assure you I have not received one Dollar of the Prize Money more than has paid my trifling expences, which, Gentlemen I will one day prove by the dates and sums of Money I have received, & by the dates and sums I have paid, for all of which I have Accounts and receipts for Dollar, which I defy Man to call in question. In the distribution of Prize Money I settled it agreeably to the rules and regulations of Congress, which Book of regulations I had with me, and had I settled it in any other manner, I think then I should have been liable to have been called to an Account.¹¹ As to the Ships' Company complaining of injustice in the settlement of their Accounts, I value it not, as it has been the case that every Ships' Company has complained of injustice in the settlement of their Accounts of every armed Vessel that has been fitted out since the commencement of the War, and generally without foundation. It matters but little to me what are their complaints, as I have taken receipts from each of them for what, and in what manner I have settled with them. The Vessel being abandoned in consequence of my conduct, is without the least foundation as well as all the rest, for upon my arrival in Spain I found a number of Captain Conyngham's Men in Prison at S^t. Bastiens,¹² in consequence of his taking a French Brig. A considerable number of Bilboa and other small Towns, and the Vessel left destitute of hands, having only a few officers on board, who were obliged to wear their Arms to prevent a few French Marines from going ashore, and had I not arrived in Spain the Cutter would have remained in the Harbor until this day, for Captain Conyngham was so destitute of Men, that he made an offer of giving the command of his Vessel to the Captain of the New England Privateer that was at Bilboa.¹³

Now Gentlemen, conscious of the uprightness of my conduct, and the regularity of my proceedings, I leave you to determine upon the justice of the complaints. I have given you an account of my proceedings, and by what orders I have acted. As to your giving Captain Conyngham his future Orders Gentlemen you could not do it, even was the one half of the Cutter belonging to the Public, without my consent, as it would be more than the King of England would dare to do, in regards to the property of any one of his Subjects in like circumstances. As I have settled with the crews of the Privateer agreeable to the Book of regulations (which Captain Conyngham has) I shall make no other distributions amongst them, but shall leave the whole affair to be settled by Congress, when, as some of them understands business they will find that I have neither made any deduction or reservations but what are clearly just.

We have had it reported for some days past that Captain Conyngham is taken, but I hope it is without foundation.¹⁴ I intended sailing for America in a few days, but in consequence of your Letter I have concluded if possible to proceed to France, when I shall have it in my power to inform you of every particular, and to convince you of the regularity of my conduct. I Am with the greatest respect &c.

2. The two vessels that Hodge fitted out at Dunkirk were the Continental Navy cutter Revenge and lugger Dolphin. Capt. Gustavus Conyngham commanded Revenge.
3. The enclosure, dated [1777], is in the Lee Papers, ViU. Below the account is the following note: "Mr. Deane has the different inclosed Accounts, as well as the Tradesmen's Bills for every article, you will please to observe that I receive only 92292 Livres during my stay at Dunkirk, for all of which I have double receipts (signed) W.H." In his accounts, Hodge lists expenses of 113,720.12.7 livres, including his commission of 2,772 livres, making his expenses 110,948.12.7—this amount is less than what Hodge received leaving a balance due him, according to his accounts, of 21,428.12.7 livres.
4. Arthur Lee wrote the Committee for Foreign Affairs on 1 June. In the portion of this letter concerning Hodge, Lee wrote: "Of the 100,000^l advanced to M^r Hodge, there appears no acc^t— I have been told that Cunningham's Vessel cost but three thousand pounds Sterling. For which purpose the Overplus was given to M^r Hodge, how the Public came to pay for her refitting, and at length the Vessel and her prize Money made over to Mess^{rs} Ross and Hodge, without a farthing being brought to public Account, it rests with M^r Deane or M^r Hodge to explain." DNA, PCC, item 83, vol. 1, p. 212 (M247, reel 110).
5. In his letter to the Committee of Foreign Affairs of 1 June, Lee did not specifically complain of being short of resources.
6. Hodge discussed Lee's letters in greater detail in his missive to John Ross of 19 Feb. 1778. NDAR 11: 1024–26.
7. Arthur Lee.
8. On 2 December 1777, Silas Deane addressed a letter to John and William Hodge specifying: "The sloop Revenge, Gustavus Conyngham, Commander, is one-half owned by the Congress of the United States, one-fourth by Mr. Hodge, and one-fourth by Ephraim Cunningham & Co. Agreeable to our Conversation sometime since, I have wrote Capt. Cunningham to render you an account of his whole proceedings since leaving Dunkirk and attend your future orders." Deane Papers, 2: 263–64. Deane defended both his conduct and that of Hodge in a letter to the President of Congress of 12 Oct. 1778. Deane Papers 2: 18–19.
9. Presumably, Michel Lagaonere.
10. Brig Gracieux.
11. The editors of the Adams Papers believe Hodge was referring to Extract from the Journals of Congress, relative to the Capture and Condemnation of Prizes, and the Fitting out Privateers . . . (Philadelphia, 1776). This pamphlet summarized the resolves of Congress regarding the Continental Navy and privateers from 25 Nov. 1775 to 3 April 1776. Because of this fact, there were conflicting provisions regarding the distribution of prize money for the two types of vessel. The editors of the Adams Papers believe that Hodge may have viewed the Revenge as a privateer while Conyngham and his crew viewed it as a Continental vessel. Adams Papers, 6: 284n.
12. That is, San Sebastián, Spain.
13. Hodge is probably referring to Harmon Courter, although the Oliver Cromwell, the privateer ship Courter commanded before its capture in May 1777, was from Pennsylvania.
14. The report of Conyngham's capture was false.

PETITION TO THE AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE ON BEHALF OF LIEUTENANT BENJAMIN REED AND LIEUTENANT BENJAMIN BATES

Ship Boston- Port Louis July 11th 1778

Whereas Jerome Cazneau,¹ Serjeant of Marines, on b^d. said Ship, on her Arrival in said Port, obtain'd Liberty to go on Shore, and there maliciously, and falsely represented to the French Men in general of their Abuse on board s^d. Ship, telling them he would not return to said Ship, & injoyning & perswading those Marines & French Men who belonged to the Ship, to quit the Ship & in every possible manner alienating their Dispositions from returning to their Duty, & that it was in his power to take every frenchman out of the Ship, & that it was his determin'd Resolution to hurt the Character of the Ship & Officers, as far as was in his power: Thro' the Partiality of the General,² (who himself says) his most Christian Majesty's Orders, to him are "to assist the Americans all that may be in his Power"; at the same time encouraging the French Men who were engaged under American Regulations, to take a Choice whether to tarry, or quit the Ship—It was observed to him, our Regulations were such, that if any Man absented himself Forty Eight hours beyond the Bounds of his Liberty, unless in Case of sickness or &c., he forfeits all Prize Money at that time due.—

The Disturbance arose from a few Frenchmen's Complaint against M^r. Reed, our first Lieu^t & M^r. Bates our third, for using their lawfull & proper Authority in their several Watches, with the becoming Strictness that those Stations required.— And this may Certify all concerned, that all the Frenchmen on b^d. the Boston have been indulged in every thing, farther even than the Laws of America allowed: & that those Officers have the Good Will & Wishes of all on board, (Frenchmen excepted) To which with pleasure we subjoin our Names

Benjamin Reed 1st Lieuf^t

Benjamin Bates 3d Lieuf-

NB The General Partiality to the frenchmen in general would not admit of those fore mentioned Officer's Vindication, but even forbid them to speak in their own Behalf, & hinted to Cap^t Tucker that he would do as he pleased, we being under the Power of his Cannon at Port Louis.— & consequently ordered they should all leave the Ship with all their Cloaths &c—³

D, PPAmp, Benjamin Franklin Papers, vol. 61, fol. 94. Docketed: "Ship Boston/Port Louis July 11th/78-." There is a question whether this petition was written by Reed and Bates or written on behalf of Reed and Bates but for some reason lacking the signatures of the authors. The editors have decided that it was more probably a petition in their favor and have treated it as such.

LORD NORTH TO EARL OF SANDWICH

[Extract]

Bushey Park, 12 July 1778.¹

I send you enclosed a letter of important intelligence, a great deal of which I believe, although the author towards the end of his letter speaks doubtfully of his means of information. What appears to me the least credible is that France, being in expectation of a junction with Spain, should risk an engagement with Mr Keppel's fleet.² Nothing can induce her to take such a step but a great and decided superiority; this she will certainly not have if the five additional ships of the line which are sent after Mr Keppel should join him in time. Important, therefore, as the stake is for which we contend, it is devoutly to be wished that France should try her strength with us before Spain declares herself.

From the frequent interviews between the rebel agents and Captain Jones,³ we may depend upon some attempts being made soon upon the coasts of this island; and, indeed, all that part of the letter which relates to the design of France to insult our maritime places with fleets of frigates agrees perfectly well with some intelligence I received about a year ago, and therefore appears to me very credible.

This puts me in mind of an important matter which had really escaped my memory. When I was last in town I met the Duke of Northumberland at Court, who told me that they were very uneasy in the north for want of two ships of war which they expected to be furnished with by the Admiralty. He renewed their offer of providing the seamen, and appears to have given up his request of a particular protection for them, seeing, I daresay, how impossible it is for the Admiralty to grant it.

There is certainly no part of the coast where such material mischief can be done in as short time as in his Grace's neighbourhood. I am [etc]

[Enclosure.]

Intelligence from Paris, 2 July 1778⁴

Captain [Paul] Jones is still here by the connivance of Dr Fr[anklin] to assist in planning the enterprise intended by this court. A. Lee and J. Adams, not being in the secret, are angry at the delay and threaten to suspend him; the Dr says, let him answer to Congress for neglect. He⁵ is intimately acquainted with the coasts of England; and the object of France is to send several fleets of frigates on different expeditions against the east and west coasts of England with troops on board to burn and destroy all they can. And if Keppel's fleet should be beat, then to make a regular and powerful invasion.

Spain has certainly agreed to accede to the treaties with America as soon as the ratifications of Congress arrive here; and Count d'Aranda⁶ has the necessary powers in his pocket. We expect the fleets will join in the Bay and act with France immediately after. The circuitous expedition lately mentioned is laid aside for the present, for want of some ships of the line expected from Holland for France account, but pretendedly in part for Spain. They won't be ready till September: I shall know more in time. . . .

I hear the Brest fleet will certainly endeavour to intercept your fleets and vessels, and if Keppel appears as certainly attack him. Five Guernsey and Jersey privateers have been brought into the western ports of France by the frigates. Captain Amiel is gone by Dunkirk to Flushing to fit out and command a ship of war under a Congress commission.⁷ You may depend Deane only embarked in the frigate for a day or two's concealment, and that he went on board the admiral at sea and will continue there till arrived.⁸ The passing the Western Islands by d'Estaing's fleet, I hear, was sent by a corvette; and it is thought that the plan of their first operations was sent to M. de Sartine. I can learn nothing with any certainty, and I shall deal less in opinion and conjecture.

The person whom you have had the goodness to enquire after¹—I could wish to be a man of Breeding and of Letters; who understood, spoke and Wrote, the French and English with Elegance and propriety: for political Reasons it would be well If he were also a Clergyman of the protestant profession; whose Sanctity of manners and happy natural Principles and disposition would diffuse Unanimity and Cheerfulness thro the Ship. And if to these essentials were added, the talent of writing fast and in fair Characters; such a Man would necessarily be worthy of the highest Confidence, and might therefore Assure himself of my Esteem & Friendship, he should allways have a place at my Table, the regulation whereof should be entirely under his direction.—

If it would not be inconvenient for you to enquire I should be glad to be informed if the Engraver could in a short time make or get made for me twelve Silver plates with my Arms² for the Front of Bargemens Caps — and I also wish to find a person who could in the same time make the Caps—I believe they would Answer best if made of Black leather.— As I do not expect to depart before the latter end of the Week—I hope the Seal at least will be previously Finished. CAPTAIN SAMUEL TUCKER TO THE AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE

On Board the Boston, at Port Lewis,
July 12th 1778.

Gentlemen

Since my Arrival at this Port, I have been much troubled with those Frenchmen I enter'd at Bourdeaux, although I Enlisted them according to your Honours Orders, which was by permission from the Admiralty; While on my short Cruze, some few words would pass as I understand between the Frenchmen & my other Sailors, but Contrary to Orders which they daily had the Perrusial off and likewise read to them, but on the same Day of my entering this Port they got Liberty eight of them to go on shore, then the Serjant of them who was a Frenchman with the others,¹ raised such reports about their treatment from the Officers, that the Deputies of his Christian Majesty with a General La Touche² of LOrient came on board last Evening & asked them in my presence if they would tarry or go on Shore, they told him they reather chuse to go on Shore, as they was Volentearas. But Gentⁿ I Enlisted them at Bourdeaux telling them I was not permitted to take Volunteres, so they signed the Ships Book, to Proceed to Boston, I shewed the General the same when on Board, then the General telling me it was better to Leave them, than take them, ordered them on Shore with all their Cloths telling them they forfeited their Wages & Prize Money, but not forfeited, as they have had of the Purser & myself more then their Wages and Prize Money will amount to. the General told me while on Board he had Command of my Ship which I was very sorry to hear, and then produced my Authority, & Regulations of the Hon^{ble} Congress, shewing the General by the Interpreter Monnsier Filyot of Port Lewis, an article which mentioned whoever was guilty of Joining in Mutiny or Sedition, should suffer death, and they all were guilty of the same, and then for an Answer to the General, I should command my Ship when at Sea, and made no doubt but I was as Capable as he was to Command any other.— then the General said he would write the Court of France & Plenipotentiaries about the two Officers who had treated his Christian Majestys Subjects so ill, that is Benj^a. Reed. Gentⁿ. my first Lieu^t. and Benj^a. Bates my Acting Lieu^t. but Hon^d. Gentⁿ. be pleased to believe that these Gentlemen Officers, never done any thing Contrary to my Orders, except boxing a frenchmans ears for flogging a small Boy & striking another for calling him a Buger, puting his fist up to his nose, this they must expect [no] Officer could bear.— My Orders being put up ag[ainst] the Bulk head, to Strike no frenchmen whatever, that small Article they broke twice and never farther, which I do not blame them for, except their not acquainting me of it, but those small things will happen amongst such a Number of men and so many different Nations; This same Serjant I took in Bourdeaux, about the last of April, by the Recommendation of one M^r. Frazier³ a late Major in the Continental Army, he had not one farthing of Money and but few Cloths. I understand he is to go on Board a French Man of War under the Command of the Generals son,⁴ and therefore I am not Surprised of their Clearing of him as well as the rest. I would not deliver his Cloths, untill he formed an Acc^t.⁵ that is unjust, not a single farthing is due to him, but reather he is indebted to the Ship more than his Wages & Prize Money will come to.—

And now Gentlemen after their Plausible Complaint was heard, and not a Word of my Officers believed, They all would return on Board again⁶ but I refused them to come any more on Board my Ship. my Number in all of Board att present is one hundred & forty six, with which on Receiving your Orders how to proceed, I shall go to Sea with, in hopes to joyn Cap^t. Whipple.⁷ I remain with the greatest Respect [&c.]

AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE TO CAPTAIN SAMUEL TUCKER

Sir,

Passy, July 13th 1778

As we understand The Boston in her last Cruise, did not sail so well as formerly, We apprehend, that this Alteration has been made by some change in her Ballast: for which Reason, you are directed, if you judge it necessary, to take out your present Ballast, to apply to M^r. Schweighauser at Nantes, and take from him such Articles, as he may have to send to America, which may be stowed away in your Ship, without Hindrance to her sailing or fighting, and to take from him also, a Quantity of Lead, to be used as Ballast untill you arrive in America, and then delivered to the Continental Agent, informing Congress or the Navy Board by Letter.¹

You are then to join Captain Whipple and to pursue his Orders respecting your future Cruises and Voyage to America.² If Lt. Simpson of the Ranger should apply to You for a passage to America, in the Boston, you will afford him Accommodations according to his Rank.³ We are

JONATHAN WILLIAMS, JR., TO LIEUTENANT THOMAS SIMPSON

Extract from a Letter by Jonathan Williams Esq^r to Lieutenant Simpson dated Passy July 14th: 1778.—

"You observed to me when I saw you at Brest that you were so much disposed to have a good understanding with Captain Jones that were any Concession ask'd of you, or did you know that sort of one would be acceptable you would readily make it—I have so much the welfare of the Service at Heart-and Harmony among its Servants is so essential a Point that I have endeavoured to promote it as Often as I have had opportunity;- and it is now with particular pleasure that I find reason to believe that if you would write a Letter to Captain Jones telling him that you did not intentionally disobey his Orders, and in any Instance where it might be construed so in Fact, it was error in Judgment only which you wish had never happened and promising to bury the matter in Oblivion if he will return your Parole—you will probably not only receive the Parole but be appointed to Command the Ranger—I mention this with the more Certainty as I know Captain Jones has recommended that Step to the Commissioners in preference to appointing a new Captain, which was thought of by them.—¹ I have no motive in this but friendship to all Sides—and it would be well to consider the importance of the Hint when it is impossible you should act in a Naval in public Service, while under suspension—and the event of a Court Martial, which cannot take place until Captain Jones and you meet in America, may not be such as though conscious of your Intentional Innocence you may expect.

“You will determine on this matter as you think proper, but if you Consider my Advice of any Consequence you will not hesitate to return an Answer as soon as possible.—

“I did not tell Captain Jones what passed between us when at Brest—because I did not then choose to interfere in what did not Concern me.— this was perhaps being too Cautious—and I am now sorry for it, as on mentioning it to him he tells me that had he known it he would then have accepted a Reasonable Concession.”—

CAPTAIN SAMUEL TUCKER TO THE AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE

Hon^d. Gentlemen

July 14th 1778-

I received a Letter from M^r Livingston on the 8th. Ins^t. wherein he informs me that their is a possibility of an Exchange of Prisoners,¹ a list of what I have on board I send your Honours inclosed with a List of the Men, I suppose must have been Recaptured in one of my Prizes,² the other two arrived Eight or ten days past. I am only waiting on your Honours how to proceed, in hopes to joyn Cap^t Whipple.

I received a Line from Cap^t Whipple wherein he tells me he shall be ready by the 20th. to sail, expecting me to wait at the Rivers Mouth for him.³ As I wrote your Honours in my last of the 12th. Ins^t.⁴ concerning my treatment from the Frenchmen, your Honours may be pleased to Judge from the Inclosed Instruement wrote by one of the Marines and five of the same seigned, the Treatment they received from me and Officers;⁵ this I mention Gentlemen to your Honours, because General Latuch,⁶ intends waiting on your Honours with a tail for Serjant Cauzneau, beleave Gent^l the Acc^t he has in French I have a Copy of in English as the General told me, and it is so far false that he is indebted to the Ship, & every person begging me to take the same Merines on board, as they were distitute of every thing,⁷ but I utterly denyed them all, except those mentioned in the inclosed Instrument, whom I received to Convince the Publick that their Reports was not true. Gentlemen be pleased to Exchange Cap^t John Lee if possible, takein in the Brig Fannee & a Brother of mine his Master by the Name of Andrew Slyfield, who are in Mill Prison, & a Nephew of mine by the Name of John Diamond,⁸ and should be glad to have an equal Number exchanged from said Prison for mine.— O that I was but Maned with Americans, or other Men I could depend upon, I should think my self a happy man, but Gent^l as I am not I must do the Best I can, allways feeling for my Country, could wish to be at Sea. I am with Respect [&c.]

STATEMENT OF MARINE SERGEANT JEROME CAZENEUVE

[Port Louis, France, between 2 and 14 July 1778]¹

I certify and declare to have enlisted on board the Boston Frigate commanded by Sam^l Tucker Esq^r-for a Cruize in Quality of Serjeant of Marines the 1st of April in the Year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred & seventy eight at forty eight Shillings

Continental money fr month, and five parts Prize Money which was promised me as my due according to the Rank I held on board s^d Frigate:— After that Engagement concluded Cap^t Tucker told me he was in want of Marines to compleat his Crew; I answered that if he was permitted to raise men I should endeavour to procure him fit & proper Subjects; In consequence thereof he sent me to the Commanding Officer of the Admiralty of Bordeaux, to get s^d permission; I returned in a very short Time with a satisfactory Answer; & by his Orders in Consequence of s^d Answer, I raised from s^d day, first of April till the Twenty first of May following more Men than were requisite to Compleat s^d Company, all at my cost & expence, except twice that having brought Some young Lads on board & not having money about me, Cap^t Tucker paid 12 solls each time for a Boat to conduct them.— Remark if you please that not one rec^d. a farthing Bounty & that I was put to many triffling Costs on Account of their Business. At the Time of our departure I was indebted ten guineas either for Lodging, Diet, other triffling costs relative to their affairs, Money spent on enlisting, Boat hire &c.—

I do not mean by the above that the ten Guineas were due to me in entering, but think that the triffling Charge of four livers fr Day during the Time I laboured for s^d Frigate cannot be contested as I received not the least nourishment on board, untill the Day I joynd s^d Vessel with the Remaining part of the Recruits below LOrmont going down the River.— I own I told the Cap^t if I had an Uniform, it would engage numbers of young men to come on Board, & that I had a green Coat which I would have turned if he would agree to furnish the facings & other Articles wanting, on which he told me to goe to his Taylor to have it made & that he would pay for it; afterwards he told me to have a Breeches & Waistcoat suitable to the Coat, When the taylor brought his Account which amounted to 111 Livres the Cap^t exacted that I should sign the Account before he would pay. Moreover Cap^t Palmes² told me to buy a Hatt for the English Serjent³ & that he would pay for it, which I did, it Cost me 12 Livres, which have not as yet been reimbursed—As to the three Guineas & six Livres advanced me by M^r Brondfield⁴ when I was sent from Blay to Bordeaux on their Affairs very important in themselves, to them I have the account on board ready to produce when Demanded.—

D, MH-H, Samuel Tucker Papers (MS Am 812).

1. The date was derived from statements in the letters of Captain Samuel Tucker to the American Commissioners in France of 12 and 14 July, both above. In his letter of 12 July, Tucker wrote that when he had a confrontation with French officials concerning Cazeneuve and other French marines, he required Cazeneuve to prepare an account before he would turn over Cazeneuve's clothing. On 14 July, Tucker informed the commissioners that Cazeneuve's accounts would be presented to them. Therefore, the statement and the attached accounts were prepared between 11 and 14 July. Boston was anchored at Port Louis throughout that time.

2. Continental Marine Captain Richard Palmes.

3. As seen in the accounts that are annexed, the sergeant's name was John White.

4. Continental agent John Bondfield.

6. Azema was a seaman with Boston.

7. Marine Lt. William Jennison.

8. In his letter to the American Commissioners in France of 14 July, below, Tucker contended that Cazeneuve's accounts were false and that Cazeneuve owed money to Boston.

MEMORIAL OF THE FARMERS-GENERAL CONCERNING THE RIGHT TO EXAMINE AMERICAN SHIPS OF WAR

Mémoire¹

Les fermiers Généraux ont eût l'honneur d'informer le Conseil par leur mémoire du 29. avril dernier² que le Capitaine Tucker commandant la fregatte de Guerre le Boston s'était refusé à la Déclaration Et a la visitte, ils ont rapellé les Principes de les Reglements qui veuleur et ordonnent ces formalités.

Monsieur le Directeur Général a bienvoulu en Ecrire a M^c Le Comte de Vergennes, en lui envoyant copie du proces verbal dressé au Sujet de ce refus de Visitte. Ce Ministre après d'être assuré que le Navire le Boston est une frégatte appartenante aux Etats unies et armée par les ordres du Congrès, a pensé que ce Vaisseau ne pouvoit être traité comme un Bâtiment marchand, Et que les Employés de la ferme générale devoient se conduire à son Egard conformément aux Regles qu'ils suivent pour les Bâtiments de Guerre de toutes les autres Nations; c'est à dire qu'ils devoient s'abstenir d'en faire la visitte Et se borner aux précautions d'usage pour empêcher les Vaisseaux de Guerre de verser de la Contrebande dans nos Ports. C'est l'objet de la Lettre cy-jointe Communiquée à la ferme Générale sous le N^o. 3905.³

Observations

M^c Le Comte de Vergennes paroît penser que les Seuls Bâtiments marchands sont astreints a la formalité des Déclarations Et des Visittes, et que les Vaisseaux de Guerre en sont dispensés; ce seroit la matière d'un privilège formel loin qu'il en existe aucun, les ordonnances des fermes, les Réglements dont Elles ont été suivies et les différents ordres des Ministres y sont expressement contraires.

L'article 11 de celle de 1681. relatif au Commerce du Tabac porte

"Enjoignons aux maître de Navires, Barques et autres Vaisseaux de declarer au bureau dans les vingt quatre heures de leur arrivée, la quantité Et la qualité du Tabac dont ils sont chargés &^{ca.}"

L'ordonnance de 1687. s'exprime aussi en fait de relâche article 9. du titre premier "Les Maîtres ou Capitaines des Vaisseaux seront tenus de faire leur Déclaration dans ces 24. heures après leur arrivée au plus prochain Bureau du lieu où ils auront elâché &^{ca.}"

La même ordonnance porte article 5. du Titre 2.

"Ceux qui feront abordes des Vaisseaux, Batteaux ou Barques dans nos Ports de mer ou autres Lieux ou nos Bureaux sont Etablis, Seront aussi tenus sur les mêmes peines de donner dans les 24. heures après leur arrivée pareilles Déclarations des marchandises de leur chargement et de représenter leurs Connaissements."

L'article 37. de la Déclaration du 1er. août 1721. confirme les dispositions de l'article 11. de l'ordonnance de 1681. cy dessus raporté; il ordonne qu'au moment de l'arrivée des Vaisseaux les Commis puissent aller àbord pour veiler et empêcher qu'il ne soit rien déchargé qu'après en avoir fait ou assuré la visitte; il enjoint au Capitaines et autres officiers de l'Equipage de donner aux Commis toute aide, faveur et protection Et d'empêcher qu'ils icy soient troublés.

Enfin les dispositions de l'arrêt du Conseil du 15. Septembre 1733. servant de

L'article 2. confirme la Loi de la Déclaration dans les 24 heures de l'arrivée des Navires, soit qu'ils viennent par destination, ou par relâche.

Toutes ces différentes dispositions des Règlement ne sont pas Seulement propres aux Bâtiments françois ou Etrangers, Marchands ou armés en guerre, Elles Sont communes aux Vaisseaux du Roi, l'article 566. du Bail des fermes de forceville dont les clauses sont les mêmes pour tous les Baux subséquents, s'exprime ainsi "les Commis Et gardes pourront aussi faire toutes Visittes dans nos Vaisseaux Et Galeres pour la Conservation de nos Droits; a quoi les Chefs d'Escadre Et les Intendants de la Marine tiendront la main."

Il n'est pas sans exemple qu'en différents tems des Commandants des Vaisseaux du Roy ayent cru pouvoir se dispenser de remplir ces formalités, ou même s'y Soient refusés, mais il est sans exemple qu'ils y aient été autorisés; au contraire les ordres particuliers de Ministres ont toujours maintenu dans ces circonstances l'observation des Règles Et l'exécution des Règlements.

En 1724. il fut armé un Vaisseau du Roy pour aller charger à Nantes des Bois de Construction; l'officier Commandant ce Bâtiment demanda d'être déchargé de faire sa Déclaration au bureau des fermes et d'y prendre les Expéditions ordinaires, cette demande ne fût point accordée. Elle fut jugée contraire a l'ordonnance de 1687 dont l'exécution même à l'Egard des Vaisseaux du Roi fut regardée comme le Seul moyen de prévenir les abus. C'est-ce qui résulte d'une Lettre de M^c Le Controleur Général Monseigneur le Comte de Maurepas du 28 août de la même année 1724.

En 1764. il se présenta une autre difficulté des officiers des Vaisseaux du Roy refuserent de recevoir les Employés des fermes àbord de leurs Bâtiments; La ferme Générale adressa des représentations à Mr Le Duc de Choiseul Et lui demanda de nouveaux ordres tant au Sujet de la visite des Employés àbord des Vaisseaux et autres Bâtiments du Roi lors de leur retour dans les Ports, qu'à l'Egard de la Déclaration qui doit être fournie au bureau des fermes.

Ce Ministre fit à la ferme Général l'honneur de lui marquer qu'il ne restait rien a prescrire sur les objets de son Mémoire, que toutes les instructions remises aux officiers Commandants des Vaisseaux et autres Bâtiments du Roi portoient Expressément qu'à leur retour, ils recevoient à leur bord les Employes des fermes, et empêcheroient qu'ils ne fussent troublés dans leurs fonctions. Ce Ministre ajouta que l'un des officiers Commandants qui par un mal Entendu avoit paru vouloir s'écarter de cette Règle avoit été d'esaprové de facon qu'iluy avoit pas lieu de craindre que son exemple fut suivi. La Lettre de Me. Le Duc de Choiseul à ce sujet est du 11. Août 1764.

En 1767. il fut fait sur des matelots au nombre de huit une saisie de vingt quatre parottes de Tabac qui avoient été déchargées du bord de la frégatte du Roi l'hirondelle alors dans le Port de Bayonne; le Commandant de ce Bâtiment reclama les matelots sur le pretexte du service ; ils lui furent rendus pour les gardes jusqu'au lendemain qu'ils devoient être conduits au Bureau pour y remplir les formalités résultantes de la Saisie Mais ils furent retenus àbord où on ne permit pas même la Signification du procès verbal; à cette occasion le Directeur des fermes observa que les officiers des Vaisseaux du Roy qui fréquentoient le Port de Bayonne pour y prendre des Charge-ments de mâtire et de Bois ne vouloient absolument souffrir aucune visitte des Em-ployés des fermes soit àbord de leurs Bâtimens, soit même dans les Canots; La ferme Général rendit compte de ces faits; Mr Le Duc de Praslin blama la conduite de l'offi-cier Commandant, et donna les ordres les plus précis pour que les Commandants des Bâtimens du Roy permissent les visites des Employés des fermes, tant à leur bord, que dans les Canots et pour qu'ils ne s'opposassent point a ce que les officiers, Mariniers, matelots et autres gens de mer qui se trouveroient Saisis de Tabac de Contrebande ou autres marchandises prohibées, fussent punisse suivant l'exigence des cas.

Il est prouvé par le raport des ordonnances Et des Réglements que tous Navires Etrangers quels qu'ils soient sont assujettis aux formalités de Déclarations et des vi-sites que les Vaisseaux même du Roi n'en sont pas dispensés, que Dans tous les tems et dans toute les circonstances le Gouvernement a maintenu même à leur Egard l'exécu-tion de la Loi. or si les Vaisseaux du Roy sont Assujettis à la Règle générale, a plus forte raison doit il en être de même des Vaisseaux Etrangers armés en guerre de quelque Nation qu'ils Soient. Jamais aucune puissance Etrangere alliée de la France, n'a été dispensée de ces formalités; il ne paroît pas qu'on puisse se prêtes aucune exception, Elle en Entraineroit d'autres dans les Suites, et sufferoit seule en ce moment pour anéantir les prohibitions et ruiner les droits du Roy.

Les fermiers Généraux ont l'honneur de proposer ces observations comme très importantes pour la Régie qui leur est confiée. Ils supplient le Conseil de leur procu-rer une Décision qui en Soumettant au droit commune les Vaisseaux des Etats unis d'amérique, serve à fixer la conduite qui doit être tenüe à leur Egard./.

[Translation]

Memorial¹

The Farmers-General had the honor to inform the Council by their memorandum of the 29th April last² that Captain Tucker, commanding the frigate "Boston," had refused to make a declaration or allow an examination. They called to mind the principles and regulations that require and order these formalities. The Director General was good enough to write about it to Count de Vergennes, sending him a copy of the procès-verbal drawn up on the subject of this refusal to allow an examination. That Minister, after having assured himself that the ship "Boston" was a frigate belonging to the United States and armed by order of Congress, considered that it could not be treated like a merchant vessel, and that the officers of the Farm-General should behave in respect thereto in conformity with the rules they observe towards ships of war of all other nations; that is to say, that they should abstain from making an ex-amination, and limit themselves to the usual precautions for preventing ships of war bringing contraband goods into our ports. This is the subject of the annexed letter communicated to the Farm-General under the number 3905.³

Observations

The Comte de Vergennes seems to think that merchant vessels only are subjected to the formality of declarations and examinations, and that ships of war are exempt therefrom; this would be a matter of formal privilege, and far from existing, the ordi-nances of the Farms, the regulations following thereon, and the various orders of the Ministers are expressly contrary thereto.

Article 11 of the Ordinance of 1681, relating to the tobacco trade runs thus:—

"Masters of ships, barques and other vessels are enjoined to report to the bureau, within twenty-four hours after their arrival, the quantity and quality of tobacco with which they are laden," etc.

The ordinance of 1687 expresses itself thus regarding putting in port—Article 9 of the first title:—

"Masters or captains of vessels will be required to make, within twenty-four hours after their arrival, their declaration to the nearest bureau of the port where they put in," etc.

The same ordinance contains as Article 5 of the 2nd title:—

"Those who, with vessels, boats or barques, put into our seaports or other places where our bureaus are established, will also be required, on the same penalties, to give, within twenty-four hours after their arrival, similar declarations of the nature of their cargoes, and to produce their bills of lading."

Article 37 of the declaration of the 1st August 1721 confirms the provisions of Article 11 of the Ordinance of 1681 abovementioned; it orders that at the moment of the arrival of the vessels the employees may go on board to watch and prevent anything being taken ashore until after having made or ensured its examination; it enjoins captains and other officers of the crew to give the employee every help, favor and protection, and to prevent his being disturbed.

Finally, the provisions of the Decree of the Council of the 15th September 1733, serving as a regulation regarding the tobacco stores on board foreign vessels, are not less express. Article 1 states:—"The clerks and officers of the Farmer may, at the moment of the arrival of a foreign vessel of any nation whatsoever, go on board thereof for the purpose of demanding the production of the store of tobacco, and of taking proper measures so that no fraudulent landing be made."

Article 2 confirms the law regarding the declaration within twenty-four hours after the arrival of the ships, whether the port be their destination or a stopping-place.

All these various provisions in the regulations are not only applicable to French or foreign vessels whether merchantmen or armed as ships of war; they are common to the King's ships; article 566 of the lease of the farms of many towns, the clauses of which are the same for all subsequent leases, is expressed thus; "the clerks and custodians may also make any examination in our vessels and galleys for the preservation of our rights, in which the flag-officers and the intendants of the navy will lend their aid."

It is not an unprecedented thing, that at various times commanders of the King's vessels have thought they could dispense with carrying out these formalities and even refused to fulfill them, but there is no precedent for their being authorized to do so; on the contrary, special orders from the Ministers have always upheld in these circumstances the observance of the rules, and the fulfillment of the regulations.

In 1724, one of the King's vessels was armed to go and take on board at Nantes some ship-building timber; the officer commanding this vessel asked to be excused from making a declaration at the Farms' bureau, and from taking there the usual pass; this request was not granted; it was considered contrary to the ordinance of 1687, the observance of which, even with regard to the King's vessels, was considered the only means of preventing abuses. This is evident from a letter from the Controller General to the Comte de Maurepas of the 28th August of the same year, 1724.

In 1764 another difficulty presented itself. Some officers of the King's vessels refused to receive the employees of the Farms on board their vessels: the Farm-General made representations to the Duke de Choiseul, and requested from him fresh orders, both on the subject of examination by the employees on board the King's vessels on their return to port, and with regard to the declaration that should be furnished to the Farms' bureau.

That Minister did the Farm-General the honor to state that there was nothing to be prescribed on the subject of the representation; that all the instructions given to the commanding officers of the Kings' vessels expressly stated that on their return they should receive on board the employees of the Farms, and prevent them from being disturbed in their duties. That Minister added that the conduct of one of the commanding officers who, through a misunderstanding, had appeared to wish to dispense with that rule, had been disapproved of in such a manner as to leave no reason to fear that his example would be followed. The Duke de Choiseul's letter on this subject is dated 11th August 1764.

In 1767, there were taken from eight sailors twenty-four rolls of tobacco which had been landed from the Kings' frigate "l'Hirondelle" then in the port of Bayonne; the commander of that vessel reclaimed the sailors on pretext of service; they were returned to him to be kept until the following day when they were to be taken to the bureau to fulfill the formalities resulting from the seizure. But they were kept on board, where the procès-verbal was not even allowed to be served. On this occasion the Director of the Farms observed that the officers of the King's vessels frequenting the port of Bayonne to take in cargoes of masts and wood would not on any account allow any examination by the employees of the Farms, whether on board their vessels or in the boats; the Farm-General reported these facts; the Duke de Praslin blamed the conduct of the commanding officer, and gave most precise orders that the commanders of the King's ships should allow the examination by the employees of the Farms, both on board and in the boats, and should not in the least oppose officers, watermen, sailors, and other sea-faring persons who might be seized with contraband tobacco or other prohibited merchandise being punished according as the case might require.

It is proved, by the testimony of ordinances and regulations, that all foreign vessels whatsoever are subject to the formalities of declaration and examination; that even the King's vessels are not exempt therefrom, that at all times and in all circumstances the Government has upheld, even with regard to them, the execution of the law. Now, if the King's vessels are subject to the general rule, there is all the more reason that the same should be the case with foreign armed vessels, of whatever nationality they may be. Never has any foreign power, allied to France, been exempt from these formalities; it does not appear that we can favor an exception; that would involve others later on, and would, at this moment, suffice only to annul the prohibitions and destroy the King's rights.

The Farmers-General have the honor to submit these observations as being very important to the administration that is entrusted to them. They beg the Council to procure for them a decision, which, while subjecting to the common law the vessels of the United States of America, may serve to define the conduct that is to be observed with regard to them.

AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE TO LIEUTENANT THOMAS SIMPSON

Lt. Simpson,

Sir,

Passi July 16th 1778.

We have Long wished to accommodate Disputes among the Officers of the Ranger, and have at length the Pleasure to inclose you a Letter from Captain Jones,¹ which has given Us much Satisfaction for several Reasons; one of which is that it has given Us, an opportunity to reinstate you on Board the Ranger.

You are accordingly upon the Receipt of this Letter, forthwith, to take the Command of the Ranger as her first Lieutenant and to join Captain Whipple of the Providence, and observe his Orders relative to your future Cruises and Voyage to America.²

As to the British Prisoners you will leave them in such place and in the Custody of such persons as M^r. Schweighauser shall advise.³

2. See also, American Commissioners in France to Capt. Abraham Whipple, this date, immediately below.

3. On this same date, the commissioners wrote Jean-Daniel Schweighauser ordering him to quickly furnish Ranger with "Necessaries" so it could put to sea. They also informed him the British prisoners in American naval vessels were to be left in Schweighauser's custody and that "tomorrow" the commissioners would try to obtain orders from the French Ministry of Marine regarding where those prisoners should be lodged. DNA, PCC, item 84, vol. 1, p. 156 (M247, roll 111).

AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE TO CAPTAIN ABRAHAM WHIPPLE

Captain Whipple,

Passy July 16th 1778.

We have ordered Lieutenant Simpson, to whom the Command of the Ranger devolves, by the Destination of Captain Jones to another Service,¹ to join you and obey your Orders, respecting his future Cruises and Voyage to America. We wish you to use all possible dispatch in getting to Sea with the Providence, *Boston*² and Ranger.

You are to Use your utmost Endeavours, to take, burn, sink and destroy all Privateers of Jersey & Guernsey, and all other British Cruisers, within the Command of your Force, as you may have Opportunity. We are &^{ca}

You are to leave all the Prisoners in such place and in the Custody of such persons as M^r. Schweighauser shall advise.³

Copy, DNA, PCC, item 84, vol. 1, p. 156 (M247, roll 111). Notation: "(Copy)."

2. Continental frigate Boston, commanded by Capt. Samuel Tucker.

3. Continental agent Jean-Daniel Schweighauser. Whipple's prisoners arrived in Nantes on 31 July. See Schweighauser to Whipple, 31 July, below.

CAPTAIN JOHN PAUL JONES TO AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE

Gentlemen,

Passy July 16th 1778

At the time when I took Lieutenant Simpson's parole I did not expect to have been long absent from America—but as circumstances have not rendered the time of my return less certain, I am willing to let the dispute between us drop forever by giving up that parole⁺—which will entitle him to command the Ranger.

I bear no Malice, and if I have done him an Injury, this will be making him all the present Satisfaction in my Power—if on the contrary he hath injured me; I will trust to himself for an Acknowledgement. I have the Honor [&c.]

Sign'd Jn^o P. Jones

+ The parole, not having been demanded, was not given up.¹

There is also a copy of this letter at PPAmP that includes a copy of Thomas Simpson's parole of 10 June 1778 and the following notation, which precedes the letter: "Copy of a letter from Captain Jones of the American Navy to the Commissioners at the Court of France dated at Passy the 16th day of July in the moment when they were about to give Mr. Livingston a Commission and appointment to Command the Ranger." Musco Livingston had been the second lieutenant of the frigate Boston but was forced to resign his commission because of ill health. JEAN-DANIEL SCHWEIGHAUSER TO THE AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE

To the Honorable Commissioners of the United States of America, at the Court of France, actually resident at Passy.

Honorable Gentlemen.

[Nantes] July 16 [1778]

Beging leave to refer you to mine of the 9 inst:¹ I have now to inform you that

Capt. Whipple at his return to his Ship, having wrote to me that he wanted the goods you had pointed out to be sent by him² in order to Stow his hold properly, I made yesterday application to M^r Williams³ Clerk for the Continental stores in his Possession, when he told me that he had no objection to deliver them provided I wou'd give him an order upon you Gentlemen, for their amount. Which I could not comply with, having no directions from you to that purpose, which I hope you will approve.— M^r Ross being by some means apprised of this, has proposed Some Powder belonging to the Public, which the Captain has accepted & is now occupied in taking into his Powder Room.⁴

Yesterday I sent the last boat with the Provisions & Slops on board & have now nothing else but what the Captain can take when he receives his last dispatches, I am actually gathering the accounts, I hope to be able to make the general one shortly, in order to transmit you. I have the honor to be respectfully [&c.]

J. D. Schweighauser

Permit me to remind you of what I hinted to you in my last of 9 inst: of the necessity of taking the proper arrangements with the Farmers⁵ respecting the Prises, as it really appears clear to me that they shou'd not be consider'd, altho English, as the produce of that Country, leaving this to your better judgement beg leave to Subscribe myself as on the other side Honorable Gentlemen [&c.]

JOURNAL OF THE CONTINENTAL NAVY FRIGATE BOSTON, CAPTAIN SAMUEL TUCKER

[Port Louis, France]

This Day pleasant Weather. at 10 AM. I orded M^r Atkins on Shore to the Broker, to enter the Prize Brig Britannia,¹ he being put on Board of s^d. Prize on June 23^d. 1778, as mate under a french prize master,² after doing his Buisiness on Shore he coming on Board the Ship, was Ordered by the first Lieu^t.—M^r Reed³ to go on Board the Prize, and behave himself in his former Station, he went immediately on Board & demanded the Charge of the prize telling the prize Master he had orders from the Lieu^t to take command of the s^d. prize; the prize Master would not give up his Charge, untill he had Orders from one, who gave it him; they fell into a dispute, whereby the honest prize master received a Wound by a knife, who complayned to me immediately, after hearing the Complaynt I sent M^r Reed on Board the Prize to send all Hands on board the Frigate, I examined them to no Satisfaction, I then inflected 12 Lashes on the bare back of the s^d. Atkins, for assuming a false Charge & suffering the prize master wounded.—⁴

1. The broker was a Mr. Field. Britannia was carrying a cargo of fish.

2. The prize master was J. P. Giscard.

3. Lt. Benjamin Reed.

4. In his journal entry for 17 July, below, Lt. William Jennison indicated it was a board of officers of Boston who decided the punishment for William Atkins.

“EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM LIEUT. ALEXANDER CHRISTIE, OF HIS MAJESTY’S SHIP THE BEDFORD, AT SEA, ONE OF ADMIRAL BYRON’S FLEET, TO HIS FATHER AT INVERNESS, DATED JULY 17, LAT. 46.5. LONG. 43. W.”

“I embrace this opportunity of sending you a few lines by a ship that I hope will arrive safe in England. We parted from Admiral Byron¹ in a very hard gale of wind the 4th of this month. We and five more sail of 74 guns are in company. The Grafton and our ship have sprung our main-masts;² Royal Oak, Admiral Parker, his top-masts;³ the Sultan her main-mast in two places, and lost all her top-masts;⁴ the *Albion*⁵ has lost her main-mast and all her top-masts, and has been seen steering for England. What has become of the rest of the fleet we know not, or how they have suffered.⁶ We are to rendezvous at New York. I am &c.”

The London Chronicle, 5–8 Sept. 1778.

1. On the make-up and mission of the squadron commanded by Vice Admiral John Byron see Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to Vice Adm. John Byron, 3 and 18 May, in NDAR 12: 654–55 and 705–6, and 5 June, above.

2. H.M.S. Grafton, Capt. Andrew Wilkinson, commander; H.M.S. Bedford, Capt. Edmund Affleck, commander.

3. H.M.S. Royal Oak, Rear Adm. Sir Hyde Parker Sr. commander.

4. H.M.S. Sultan, Capt. John Wheelock, commander.

5. H.M.S. Albion, Capt. Sir George Bowyer, commander.

6. There were eight additional ships in Byron’s squadron. It was 26 Sept. before this scattered squadron reassembled at Sandy Hook. When it reassembled, the squadron was missing two ships: H.M.S. Russell had returned to England because of storm damage and H.M.S. Invincible was lying crippled in St. John’s, Newfoundland. Moreover, all of Byron’s ships required extensive refitting, and it was not until 18 Oct. that the squadron was able to sail in search of the French fleet commanded by Vice-amiral comte d’Estaing. WILLIAMSON’S LIVERPOOL ADVERTISER AND MERCANTILE CHRONICLE, FRIDAY, JULY 17, 1778

Sir Geo. Collier, Captain of his Majesty’s ship the Rainbow, writes, in a letter of the 11th of May,¹ that on the 11th, being a few miles from land near Casco Bay, he fell in with and retook the Martha, with a valuable cargo, which had been taken by the Rebels on her voyage from London to New York;² that he had also retaken the *Elizabeth*³ and Polly,⁴ the former having been bound from Bourdeaux to New York, laden with wines and brandy, the latter from St. Augustine to London, with tobacco and tar; and that he had taken the Mary, a schooner from Faro for Boston, laden salt.

. . . A letter from Halifax, dated June 8, mentions, that the Mary, Capt. Smith, from St. Augustine to London, has been taken twice by rebels, and as often retaken by his Majesty's ships. She is now brought in there by the Ambuscade man of war;⁵ her cargo consists of 187 barrels of tar, 32 hhds of tobacco, 1500 oak staves, &c.

1. The first paragraph of this letter seems to have been drawn directly from Collier's letter to Philip Stephens of 16 May 1778. See Captain George Collier to Secretary of the Admiralty Philip Stephens, 16 May 1778, in NDAR 12: 365.

2. Ship Martha, Peter McIntosh, master, had been captured by the Continental frigate Boston, Capt. Samuel Tucker, commander, on 10 Mar. Lt. Hezekiah Welch of Boston had been sent to Boston, Massachusetts, with the prize. See Samuel Tucker to the Continental Navy Board of the Eastern Department, 11 Mar., in NDAR 11: 1079–80, and Diary of John Adams, 14 Mar. 1778, in NDAR 11: 1085–86. An "Extract of a letter from Dover, July 3," printed in Williamson's Liverpool Advertiser on 10 July reported that the cargo of Martha was valued at £70,000 and "would have been most acceptable to the rebels if they could but have carried her in safe." Martha carried "bale goods"; Howe's Prize List, 30 Oct. 1778, UKLPR, Adm. 1/488, fol. 484. For an account of the recapture of Martha, see Journal of H.M. frigate Rainbow, 11 May 1778, in NDAR 12: 326–27.

3. Brigantine Elizabeth, Thomas Howe, master, captured on 2 May off Cape Ann. It carried a cargo of wine and brandy. The master contended the brigantine was a recapture but his claim was denied. Records of the Vice-Admiralty Court at Halifax, Nova Scotia, 26. Other records give the date of capture as 1 May; Howe's Prize List, 30 Oct. 1778, UKLPR, Adm. 1/488, fol. 484. The British record of the recapture notes that Elizabeth had been captured by the Massachusetts Navy brigantine Hazard, commanded by Capt. Simeon Samson, an account that was corroborated in a Boston newspaper. Journal of H.M. frigate Rainbow, 1 May 1778, in NDAR 12: 237; and The Boston-Gazette, and Country Journal, 18 May 1778, in NDAR 12: 380.

4. Both Collier, in his letter to Stephens of 16 May 1778, and the newspaper reversed the names of Mary and Polly. According to the Howe's Prize List, Rainbow's journal, and the Vice-Admiralty Court at Halifax, Nova Scotia, it was schooner Polly, Ignatius Webber, master, that was captured while on a voyage from Faro, Portugal, for Boston with a cargo of salt. It was taken on 9 May between George's Bank and Cape Ann. Collier to Stephens, 16 May 1778, in NDAR 12: 365; Journal of H.M. frigate Rainbow, 9 May 1778, in NDAR 12: 302; Howe's Prize List, 30 Oct. 1778, UKLPR, Adm. 1/488, fols. 483–84; and Records of the Vice-Admiralty Court at Halifax, Nova Scotia, p. 61.

5. Mary was recaptured by H.M. frigate Rainbow on 8 May and by H.M. frigate Ambuscade, Capt. John Macartney, commander, on 18 May 1778. Howe's Prize List, 30 Oct. 1778, UKLPR, Adm. 1/488, fols. 483–84 and 487–88. For the accounts of the recaptures of Mary, see NDAR 12: 297, 365, and 389.

These were drawn up to-day;² they forbid all gambling, and blackguarding, which have caused great disturbance in the yard, and occasioned much fighting. They also forbid any improper language to any officer or soldier, who are now, or may hereafter be, appointed to preside over us.³ These articles were read in the yard before all the prisoners, and then stuck up in prison, and two men out of each ship's company were appointed to see them put into execution.⁴

CAPTAIN JOHN PAUL JONES TO GABRIEL DE SARTINE

Honored Sir

Passy July 17th 1778

I should be ungrateful did I not return you my warmest thanks, for your kind and Generous intentions in my favor.— My greatest ambition would be to merit your future approbation; by my Services against the common Enemy of France and America.— Had your first Plan taken place¹—the most pleasing prospect of Success would have been before me: but that seems now a distant Object.

I have no doubt but that many projects, that would promise Success might be formed from the Hints which I had the Honor of sending lately for your Inspection:²— Had I been entrusted with the Chief Command, I would have held myself Responsible for Consequences.

I am bound in Honor to communicate faithfully to Congress the generous Offer which the King now makes; of Lending the Epervier,³ in the meantime to be employed under my Command and under the Flag of America.— I would thankfully have accepted this offer the moment that it was communicated to me; had not difficulties Occurred on account of the Situation of the American Funds in Europe.

I have now under my Command a Ship bound to America⁴—On my arrival there; from the confidence of Congress I have reason to expect an Immediate Removal into one of their best Ships. I have reason Also to expect the chief Command of the first Squadron destined for an Expedition, having in my possession several similar appointments. And when Congress see fit to appoint Admirals, I have assurances that my Name will not be forgot.

These are flattering prospects to a Man who has Drawn his Sword only upon principles of Philanthropy; and in Support of the Dignity of Human Nature.— But as I prefer a solid to a Shining Reputation—An useful to a Splendid Command—I hold myself Ready, with the approbation of the Commissioners⁵ to be Governed by you in any measures that may tend to distress and humble the Common Enemy. I have the Honor [&c.]

GABRIEL DE SARTINE TO THE AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE

A Versailles le 18 Juillet 1778.

Je recois, Messieurs, des Lettres de L'orient au Sujet de differents qui se sont elevés le Commandant de la Fregate americain le Boston, et des Francois, qui faisoient partie de son Equipage, tant, en qualité de Volontiers, qu'en cell de Matelots.¹ Suivent ce qui m'est marqué a ce sujet, quelques Moyens qu'on ait employé pour faire [blank] de les concilier; on n'a pas pû parvenir, et l'on a été obligé d'en faire débarquer un nombre de 28, dont 25 Volontiers et 3 Novices, et il paroît que le Mécontentement de ces gens n'étoit pas contra le Capitaine du Batiment, ne contra celuy des Volontaires mais qu'il n'en est pas de même du 1^e Lieutenant,² et de deux autres officiers de l'Etat Major, dont il est constant qu'ils avoient éprouvé de tres mauvais traitement; ce sont des faits dont le Commissaire des Classes de L'orient a eu connoissance, ainsy que M. de la Touche de Preville chef d'Escadre qui s'étant trouvé à l'orient, a l'occasion d'operation dont il est chargé, s'étoit transporté abord de la Fregate: cet officier Général a même eu personnellement des sujets de plaintes qui l'ont mis dans le cas de s'en expliquer vis-à-vis du Capitaine. Au surplus, lorsque les Gens débarqués été mis a terre, le Capitaine s'est employé a leur faire, rendre tout ca qu'il a pu de leur hardes, qui, pendant leur Observe, avoient été en partie pillés par les gens de L'Equipage; mais il paroît qu'ils éprouvent des difficultés sur leur traitement; que ces gens pretendent avoir part sur deux Prises conduits a L'orient, renonceant a toute pretentions sur deux autres qui ont été expédiées pour L'Amerique.³ Ils prétendent qu'ils ne s'étoient engagés a Bordeaux que pour une Croisiere, ainsly que leur Engagement en fait mention, et le Capitaine soutient qu'elle ne doit finir qu'a L'Arrivée du Batiment a Boston, quisque [quisque] ella ne soit pas expliqué dans l'Engagement; il conviendrait, Messieurs, que vous donnassiez des ordres a ce sujet pour éviter les frais auxquels cette Contestation pourroit donner lieu, si elle étoit portée une Siege de L'amirauté. Je vous prie de me marquer ce que vous auriez fait a ce sujet, a fin que je fasse connoître au Commissaire de Classes. ce Commissaire m'a mandé avoir offert au Capitaine de la Frégate toutes les facilités qui pourroient dependre de lui, pour L'Engagement de nouveaux Volontaires en remplacement. J'ay l'honneur [&c.]

P.S. Le S^r Schweighauser⁴ vient de m'écrire de Nantes que son Correspondant a Brest éprouve des Difficultés de la part de l'amirauté relativement a la Vente des Prises faites par la Fregate Le Ranger.⁵ j'écris aux officiers de ce siege pour faire cesser ces difficultés, et j'eu donne avis au Sr. Schweighauser.

[Contemporary Translation]

Versailles the 18 July 1778

I receive, Gentlemen, Letters from L'Orient, on the Subject of Differences, which have arisen, between the Commander of the American Frigate the Boston and some Frenchmen who made a part of his Crew, some in the Character of Volunteers, and others in the quality of Sailors.¹ According to what is written to me, upon this Subject, whatever means have been employed to effect a reconciliation, they have not been able to obtain it. And they have been obliged to disembark a Number of twenty Eight, twenty five of whom are volunteers and three Novices. It appears that the discontent of these People was not against the Captain of the Ship, nor against that of the Volunteers, but that it was not the same with the first Lieutenant,² and two other Officers, from whom, it appears, they had received very ill Treatment; These are Facts which have come to the Knowledge of the Commissary of the Classes at L'orient, as well as of Monsieur De La Touche de Treville Chef D'Escadre, who being at L'orient on Occasion of the Operations, with which he is charged, went on board the Frigate. This General Officer has had, even, personally Subjects of Complaint, which have obliged him to enter into Explanations with the Captain. Moreover, when the People disembarked were put on Shore, the Captain employed himself, in causing to be restored to them, all he could of their property, which during their Absence had been in part pillaged by some of the Crew; but it appears that they experience difficulties about their Pay and Subsistence; that they pretend to have a right to Shares in two Prizes sent into L'orient, but renouncing all Pretensions to two others, which have been sent to America.³ They pretend that they did not engage themselves at Bourdeaux, but for one Cruise, as their Engagement mentions but the Captain asserts that it ought not to finish, till after the Arrival of the Vessel at Boston, although this is not explained in the Engagement. It will be convenient, Gentlemen, that you give orders upon this Subject to avoid the Expence to which this Contest will give rise, if it should be carried to the Admiralty. I pray you to signify to me, what you would wish to have done upon this Subject, that I may communicate it to the Commissary of the Classes. This Commissary writes me, that he has offered the Captain of the Frigate, all the facilities, which may depend upon him, for the Inlistment of new Volunteers, to replace the others. I have the honour to be [&c.]

P.S. Mr. Schweighauser⁴ has written me from Nantes, that his Correspondent at Brest, meets with difficulties on the Part of the Admiralty relative to the Sale of the Prizes, made by the Frigate Ranger.⁵ I write to the Officers of the Admiralty, to cause those difficulties to cease and I give Notice of it to Mr. Schweighauser.

LORD WEYMOUTH TO LORDS COMMISSIONERS OF THE ADMIRALTY

My Lords

S^t James's 19th July 1778

In consequence of the Intelligence received that Orders have been given by the french Court for seizing or destroying all Ships and Vessels belonging to British Subjects, I am commanded to signify to Your Lordships His Majesty's Pleasure that You send immediately Instructions to Admiral Keppel¹ to seize or destroy all Ships belonging to France or french Subjects which he may meet with, and that You give the like Orders to Vice Admiral Buckle² Commander in Chief of His Majesty's Ships and Vessels in the Downs, and to the Commanders of His Majesty's Ships and Vessels employed as Convoys or Cruizers on the Coast of Great Britain and Ireland; And it is His Majesty's further Pleasure that Your Lordships should order Vessels to be prepared with all possible Dispatch to carry the same Instructions to the Commanders of His Majesty's Fleets, Ships and Vessels on foreign Stations. I am &c Weymouth

Copy, UKLPR, S.P. (Naval) 42/53, fol. 23. Notation: "Secret/Lords Commissioners/of the/Admiralty."

2. Vice Adm. Matthew Buckle.

JOSEPH KENDALL TO BENJAMIN FRANKLIN

Respected Sir

Nantes July 19th 1778.

Since I had the Honor of seeing you I have influenced a Relation (while in England) to discharge all my pecuniary obligations there, & am now at liberty to offer myself to you to serve in any capacity you may think me capable of—¹ My profession is that of a Surgeon, but will exert myself with pleasure in any other line, to the utmost of my abilities—I have been here about a Week—I came by the way of Guernsey & Jersey, the latter of which I left the beginning of this Month, in company with 5 Prisoners on board a Dutch Ship bound for the Isld of Brehæ—² I am sorry to inform you of the number of Privateers fitted out of those Islands, & their success in distressing our trade—from the former there are 21, the latter 16 beside 3 upon the Stocks—The Adventurers from Guernsey have taken 24 Vessels, those of Jersey 16 their force is from 16- 6^{pr} & 80 Men to half that Number of both. But they have already engaged many more in case of a War with this Country which they are in daily expectation of—& they seem'd so confident of commissions to take French property that they delay putting out to Sea till their Commissions are sign'd—. The *Fox*³ & another Frigate with a small cutter is now upon that Station, they were orderd in consequence of a French Ship of force cruiz^s off those Islands—They have no Military but the New rais'd Regiment of Highlanders command by Lord M^cCloud,⁴ they are divided between the 2 Islands, they are as yet but little acquainted with discipline & near 1/3 are Sick. The Militia are much worse, tho' exercis'd daily, every 12th. Man is upon Guard at Night, notwithstanding which I shou'd think it no difficult matter to land in the Night with 25 or 30 Men & destroy the Shipping—The principal Pier is that of S^t. Hilliare, distant near one half a Mile from the Town, containing 38 Vessels & guarded only by 2 Men—When the tide is ebb, the Water does not come within half a Mile of the Pier, on which I build the probability of success in the attempt—

There is now an American Prisoner there ready to cooperate in any Plan, you may think eligible or if you will procure him the means of escaping from the Island, he will attempt what is here intimated—this Person is Captⁿ. M^cKirdy of Maryland,⁵ he desired me to mention him in this manner to you—I have such an opinion of the practicability of the Plan, that I have no objection to make one of 30 who may be depended upon to attempt it—I should have wrote to you sooner to have offer'd myself, but I thought I might have been able to get out with the Fleet under the care of the Providence & the Boston, which I cannot accomplish for the want of Money to purchase necessaries—I have a Passage offerd me in the former of these Vessels, but I am in such want of Clothes, that I must wait till an opportunity offers to go as Surgeon, if I cannot get any other assistance—Might I presume to intrude once more upon you, I shou'd be happy to receive the means of getting either immediately to America or into the Continental employ on board one of their Ships in France—The Ship will I beleive not sail till the beginning of the next Week & if you will be so kind as to serve me by that time I shall ever acknowlege it as the greatest obligation, confer'd on Sir- Your most ob^t. Hble Serv^t

Joseph Kendall

Before I left London I informd M^r. Wharton⁶ of my wishes, & of my inability to get here, this however I have accomplish'd, but with many difficulties—for the rest I must wait the event—

HEATHCOTE MUIRSON TO BENJAMIN FRANKLIN

Sir

Forton Prison July 21st 1778

The unfortunate situation I am in, I beg leave to make as an apology for my troubling you to peruse the following, unhappy, anecdote of my life.

I am the youngest son of Doct^r George Muirson of Suffolk County Long Island; and connected in the family of Doct^r Joshua Babcock of Westerly,¹ whose son M^r Adam Babcock married a sister of mine. I early engaged in the service of my Country, (contrary to the express orders of my Father & family, who, have positively refus'd me evry kind of support, so long as I continue in the Rebel service, as they please to term it.) In Oct^r 1776, I was made a prisoner by Gen^l Carlton on Lake Champlain, then acting as Cap^t of Marines on board the fleet commanded by Gen^l Arnold, and was permitted to return home upon my Parole, where I remained a prisoner untill April 1778. I have been repeatedly solicited by my father & friends to return to them, making me evry offer they thought probable would tempt me, and even went so far as to procure me a pardon from Gov^r Tryon,² (on the supposition that I was to deny the service of my country,) which I receiv'd, and destroy'd.

Immediately after my exchange, I engaged in my former capacity on board the Brig^{nc}. Angelica of 16 Guns and ninety eight men, William Dennis Esq^r commander.

We sailed from Boston 25th. of May, and had been at sea only five days, when we fell in with and were captured by the Andromeda frigate from Philadelphia, Gen^l Howe being on board for England.³

We were brought to SpitHead, and after undergoing a ceremonious tryal, were committed as Pirates to this dismal Prison.

I have no desire Sir to boast of my Pedigree or connections, I only wish modestly to inform you who I am, thinking most probably you may have been acquainted with the persons or Characters of those I have mentioned, and by this means introduce myself to your Honor as a person destitute of friends and in want of almost evry necessary of life. It will be needless to enter into a long detail of my treatment it is too much to say that I was rob'd of evry thing except the clothes I had upon me; which obliges me to make my complaint in this channel and humbly ask your assistance.—

If it is in your power Sir to give me any releif, either in effecting my exchange, or by any means conveying me a sum of money, I will obligate myself to remit the value of the same agreeable to your Order.—

At present I have very little fortune except what is in the Enemies possession on Long Island; yet happily for me my brother in Law grants me evry thing I want which will enable me to answer any obligation your Honour may please to lay me under.—⁴I am Sir [&c.]

LONDON

The Royal Subject, Capt. Andrew Sym, belonging to Glasgow,¹ has taken and carried into New York the sloop Greyhound, with 86 hogsheads of tobacco, and some lumber;² and likewise another sloop, with rice, indigo, and 27 hogsheads of tobacco.³ This makes seven prizes taken and carried into New York in the course of a few months by Capt. Sym. . . .

A letter was received at Liverpool last Thursday, informing, that the Dolphin, Capt. Penrice,⁴ belonging to Whitehaven, was taken off Cuba, on her passage from Halifax, by an American sloop privateer, of six guns and 30 men, and sent for America. While Capt. Penrice was on board the privateer, they were re-taken by the Le Blond,⁵ (a ship belonging to the British Navy, formerly one of Thurot's squadron, defeated off the Isle of Man by Capt. Elliot.)⁶ The day after the Le Blond and privateer being in company, fell in with a French frigate of 24 guns, which they attacked, and after an obstinate engagement took, and carried safe into Halifax.⁷ The frigate was bound for Boston.

The Kitty Fisher, of Liverpool,⁸ is taken on the Coast of Africa, by the Marlborough Rebel privateer.⁹

It is yesterday reported, that a French frigate, of 30 guns, and 220 men, was taken off the coast of Scotland by a 20 gun ship, cruizing there for the protection of the Scotch trade.¹⁰

The Levant frigate, of 28 guns,¹¹ sent in the 21st of June to Gibraltar, an American brig, called the Robert, laden with salt from Cadiz to North America. She had been out from Cadiz only eight days.¹²

THE AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE TO GABRIEL DE SARTINE

M. De Sartine.

Passi July 22 1778

We have the Honour of your Excellency's Letters of July 15th. and 18th.¹

James Niggins and John Selby are wholly unknown to Us, but as their Account of themselves to your Excellency is probable enough; and if nothing appears to invalidate their Relation, We should be obliged to your Excellency if you will grant their Request.

We are very Sorry for the Dispute between two Officers of the Boston, and some of the Men belonging to this Nation, who had inlisted on board that Frigate, and for the Trouble your Excellency has had in Consequence of it.— We have a Letter from Captain Tucker and another from those two officers upon the same subject.²

Captain Tucker informs Us, that these Men were inlisted at Bourdeaux, by Permission of the Admiralty, not as Volunteers, but that they signed the ships Books like other Men, to proceed to Boston and were consequently liable to do the Duty, and ought to be governed by the Rules of War which are made by the Congress, for the Government of all their ships of War. That on the day of his entering at Port Louis, Eight of them obtained Liberty to go on shore, that one of them who was a serjeant,³ raised such Reports of their ill treatment from the Officers that the Deputies of his Majesty with the General⁴ came on board, and asked them if they would tarry or go on shore. They chose to go on shore. The Captⁿ. shewed the General the Book of their Enlistment, but the General, saying it was better to leave them, than to take them, ordered them on shore, with all their Cloathes, telling them, they forfeited their Wages and Prize Money. But the Captain observes that they have received of the Purser and himself, more than their Wages and Prize Money will amount to. That the two officers, complaind of, have never done any Thing contrary to, his orders except boxing one of these Mens Ears for flogging a Boy and Striking another for calling him a Buger, putting his fist up to his Nose, which they must expect no Officer would bear.— The Captain says his orders were to put up against the Bulk head, to strike no French Man whatever. This Article the two Officers broke twice, and nevermore.

This is the substance of the Captains Account of the Affair.— It is impossible for Us, at this Distance to judge between the Parties. All we wish for is that Justice may be done. Our Opinion is this, if the Men are inlisted upon the ships Books to go to Boston they ought to return to the ship and be received by the Captain, and are intituled to their Wages and Prize Money.

But if they are not inlisted in Writing to go to Boston, but only for a Cruise that Cruise is compleated by the ships return to France, they have a Right to leave the ship if they choose it, and are still intituled to their share of Wages and Prize Money, deducting from it however What has been Advanced them by the Captain and Purser.

These are our sentiments of the Justice of the affair. These We shall write to Captain Tucker,⁵ and We hope that the Dispute may in this Way be amicably ended. We inclose y^r Excellency a Copy of the acknowledgement of good treatment by some of those Sailors⁶ & our Letter to Captain Tucker, and should be obliged to your Excellency to forward it, to him with yours to the officers who have made the Complaint. We have orderd all our Frigates to sail immediately with what Goods they can carry so as not impede their Cruize.⁷

1. In his letter of 15 July, Sartine asked if the Commissioners were familiar with two prisoners at Nantes who said they were Americans pressed into service with an English privateer after capture of their vessel, the ship Hancock and Adams. AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE TO CAPTAIN SAMUEL TUCKER

Passy July 22^d 1778

We have received your Letters relative to the Disputes between two of your Officers & some of your Men belonging to this Nation,¹ & we are of Opinion that if the Men are inlisted upon the Ships Books, to go to Boston, they ought to return to the Ship, & be received by you, & are intitled to their Wages & prize money. But if they are not inlisted in writing to go to Boston, but only for a Cruise, that Cruise is compleated by the Ships Return to France & they have a Right to leave the Ship if they chuse it, & are intitled to their Share of Wages & prize money, deducting therefrom however what has been advanced them by the Captain & Purser—You are strictly enjoined to take special Care that all Frenchmen who may be in the Service under you be at all times treated with Justice & Impartiality, & that Suitable Allowances be made for the Difficulties they are under in not understanding our Language, & not being habituated to our Customs—We are Your humble Serv'ts

B Franklin
Arthur Lee
John Adams

P.S. If however the Men insist on leaving the Ship altho' inlisted expressly to go to Boston, we advise you to agree to it, but in that Case we think they are not intitled to wages or prize Money—

Vous m'avez fait lhonneur de me marquer, Monsieur le Comte, le 17 may d^e¹ que vous vous etiez assuré que la frégate le Boston, dont le Capitaine avoit refusé la declaration et la visite, apartenoit aux Etats unis de l'Amerique et etoit véritablement armée par les ordres du Congrès; Vous estimiez en consequence qu'on ne pouvoit pas le traiter comme un bâtiment marchand et que les Employés devoient, ainsi qu'ils le font à légard de tous les bâtimens de guerre, Se borner aux précautions d'usage pour empêcher le versement de la contrebande.

Les fermiers generaux, auxquels j'en ai fait part, viennent de me remettre le me-

Paris, 24 July 1778.

You did me the honor to inform me. Monsieur le Comte, on the 17th May last,¹ that you had been assured that the frigate the "Boston", whose Captain had refused to declare and to allow the examination, belonged to the United States of America, and was really armed by order of Congress. You consequently considered that it could not be treated as a merchant vessel, and that the employees should, as they do with regard to all vessels of war, limit themselves to the usual precautions for preventing the landing of contraband goods.

The farmers-general, to whom I communicated this, have just sent me the enclosed memorial.² In this they show that, by the terms of the ordinances, foreign or national vessels, whether ships of war or traders, are subject to the formalities of declaration and examination; that at all times and in all circumstances they have been carried out.

In spite of all my researches, I have not found any regulation derogating from this legislation for foreign ships of war; and if none really exists, the interest of the King's dues and of our manufactures do not appear to admit of an exception. I can, however, only submit the question to your judgment, and beg you to let me know what you think of it. I have the honor to be [&c.]

Sir

Marenes, 25 July 1778.

I took the liberty of writing to you on the 6th of this month¹ to ask you kindly to have paid to me the sum of 720 livres tournois due to Augustin Guichard, my brother, embarked as officer² in a United States vessel called the Lexington, commanded by Mr. Johnson, for a year's salary to run from 12 May 1777 to 12 May 1778, as well as the two parts due him from the prizes they have taken. I have to inform you, Sir, that my brother having been captured³ and finding himself in need of money has appealed to me, and, having supplied him with the same, he has given me an order to collect his salary and shares in the prizes in question. I am sure, Sir, that you will heed my request in this connection and do justice to the claim I am submitting. My brother has served the United States with sufficient distinction and praise to expect from them in return the payment of a legitimate debt.

All unite in rendering justice to my brother. Mr. Wilk, clerk of the late Mr. Moris⁴ of Nantes, agent of the Congress, has spoken to me of him in the highest terms and assures me that what he claims is rightfully due him. Mr. Odea Junior, sub-delegate from Paimbeuf, tells me in his letter of the first of this month that he remembers perfectly his bringing in a prize of Captain Johnson's named the Sally of Baltimore.

I hope, Sir, that you will vouchsafe me a reply and grant what I ask, all the more because it is to relieve the sufferings of an unfortunate man who has devoted himself entirely to the good of the Congress. It was not adventure nor the lure of gain that made him act, but the desire to fight for a just cause even though unseen. I am with respect, Sir, [&c.]

Brest July 27th. 1778—

I wrote you from Nantes that I had arrived there, and was to take my passage for America in the Providence, the 25. M^r Livingston¹ arriving from Paris informed me that you had appointed him to the command of the Ranger, but on Captain Jones delivering up my parole, you were pleased to honour me with that appointment.²

Your Honours letters to Captain Whipple, and M^r Schweighasser coming to their hands advising them of it,³ and that I was to obey Captain Whipple's instructions, he ordered me the 24th- to proceed immediately for Brest, to take the command of the Ranger, and to get her ready for sea immediately, with not less than three months provisions on board. M^r Schweighasser also gave me a letter to his friend here⁴ to supply me with every necessary I shou'd want for that purpose—I set out from Nantes the 24th in the evening, and arrived here the 26th. find the Ship near ready, wanting a few stores, and her bottom to be cleaned for which only a few days will be required—Captain Whipple, and M^r Schweighasser recommended my entering thirty or forty of the prisoners if possible to serve in the Boston, which I shall endeavour to do, and make no doubt I shall succeed As soon as possible, shall procure a State of the Ranger in regard to her stores, and forward you—The prizes are not yet sold, M^r Schweighasser has been kind enough to say, if their value cou'd be nearly ascertained, he will advance the money for the Ships company, which will set every thing on a proper footing.

I have the pleasure to inform you that your appointment affords the greatest satisfaction to Officers, and men—

The Battle of Ushant

On 27 July 1778, one hundred miles west of Ushant, an island at the mouth of the English Channel, the British Channel Fleet of twenty-nine ships of the line under Adm. Augustus Keppel and the French Brest Fleet of thirty-two ships of the line under Vice Admiral comte d'Orvilliers fought the first major naval engagement of the American Revolutionary War between the two European antagonists. In France, after the indecisive battle, the duc de Chartres, accused of failing to engage the enemy, resigned from the navy, and in Great Britain, a public quarrel between Keppel and subordinate Vice Adm. Sir Hugh Palliser over responsibility for the failure to secure victory led to Keppel's resignation and Palliser's leaving Parliament and his post of lieutenant-general of the Marines.

AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE TO CONTINENTAL NAVY BOARD OF THE EASTERN DEPARTMENT

Gentlemen,

Passi July 29th 1778

We have recieved your favor of the Eighth of June,¹ by the Hand of Captain Barnes of the Schooner Dispatch, together with the Packets, forwarded by the Honorable Council of Massachusetts Bay.² We have according to your desire given Orders to M^r Schweighauser at Nantes to furnish the Captain, with such supplies as may be necessary to provide for his Return, and to defray his Expences there. We have given him an order on our Banker for a Months Pay, to himself and his Crew, and a Gratification to him of one hundred Dollars, in lieu of Primage, which as you inform Us, is according to Contract.³

We thank You for the Gazettes, and shall always be obliged to you for similar favors, which are not less beneficial to the public, than amusing to Us. We have the Honour to be, with great Respect &c^c

We cannot avoid expressing our Surprise at the monstrous Sum to be advanced here in Silver and Gold to the Officers and Crew of this Vessel. If it was really the Intention of the Honourable Board that it should be paid so—We wish the Board had specified the Sums to be paid to each person.

2. Capt. Corbin Barnes brought packets containing copies of the ratified Franco-American treaty.

3. According to the accounts of Rodolphe-Ferdinand Grand, the commissioners' banker, he paid 2,108.15 livres to Barnes. Adams Papers 6: 246.

AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE TO CAPTAIN THOMAS READ

Captain Read,

Passi July 29th. 1778

You will take on Board your Vessell¹ such a Cargo, as you shall receive from M^r Schweighauser, out of such Merchandizes belonging to the Public as he has in his Hands.² You will get loaded and to Sea with all possible dispatch and return to such part of America as you shall Judge safest. We propose to send Dispatches by You, which We shall forward in season, but dont wait, after you are ready to sail, for any dispatches from Us, without further Orders from Us.³ We are &c^c

Mr. Cologan's Answer./.

Sir

In Reply to yours of the 27th of this Month,¹ which we received yesterday at 9 o'clock in the Evening, we can tell you that we did not request the Arrest of your Vessel,² since against you we have no Pretensions whatsoever, nor were we even acquainted with you, not knowing your name until Receiving your letter; what his Excellency the Governor of these Islands³ ordered is the Arrest of Captain Cunningham and of his Prize⁴ which he had at the Island of Palma, in Virtue of having unjustly and as a Pirate taken a Swedish Vessel laden with Effects a majority of which -belonged to us, Natives of this City, and the Remainder to other Natives or Neighbors of these Islands; all Subjects of his Catholic Majesty, which was declared in London by the Chargé des Affaires of our Court to that of England According to the Certificate that the Swedish Captain brought and which we would have found on board his schooner with the Papers of the said Captain, which we learned from a Swedish sailor who swam ashore at La Palma; But as the Order of His Excellency did not arrive soon enough at the said Island, Captain Cunningham escaped, As soon as we Learned of it we wrote to His excellency, telling him that we had no Pretension whatsoever against the Prize, which for us was an Object of very little Consideration and that he could do an Office as seemed good to him and in Consequence His Excellency issued an Order to set it at Liberty, which should have been executé on the 24th of the Current Month, when the Order would have been received at La Palma; since His Arrival on this Island and until His Arrest, it was held as Property of the said Cunningham. If it belongs now to you, present your Claims to His Excellency who will do you Justice, & be assured that he will soon order your Ship delivered to you, without doubt. This is all that we can tell you and we remain [&c.]

COMTE DE VERGENNES TO JACQUES NECKER

M. Necker

J'ai reçu, M, la lettre que vous m'avez fait l'honneur de m'écrire le 24. de ce moi, aussi que le mémoire de M^s les fermiers-généraux concernant la frégate américaine le Boston.¹ j'ay lû cette pièce avec la plus grande attention; mais je vous avoue que j'ay été étonné que pour établir les formes à suivre vis-à-vis d'un bâtiment de guerre, en n'y ait été que des ordonnances relatives à la visite des bâtiments marchands. Selon moi la question qu'il l'agit de décider, est on ne peut pas plus simple. les employés de la ferme sont-ils autorisés ou sont-ils dans l'usage de visiter les vaisseaux ou autres bâtiments de guerre étrangers entrant dans nos bords? Au défaut de loy pour établir l'affirmative, M^s les fermiers-généraux auraient au moins des cites des faits. il y a quelques mois seulement qu'un frégate hollandaise nommée le Thétis à séjourné dans le port de Toulon; je demande si les employés de la ferme l'ont visités ou non? La réponse a faire sur cette question, servira de décision par raport à la fregate américaine le Boston, les deux cas etant parfaitement analogues. Au surplus, M, je vais devoir vous observer que nos vaisseaux et autres bâtiments de guerre ne sont point visités dans les ports étrangers, et que si l'on voulait-les y assujetés, le le Roi ne le Souffrirait point. vous jugerez de vous même que que S. M^{te}. ne saurait refuser la reciprocité sans commettre une injustice manifeste. Quant au traité de commerce que le Roi a conclu avec les Etats-unis, il ne renferme aucune stipulation relative à la matière dont il est question, et je ne connais aucun autre traité où il en soit fait mention.

Versailles, 30 July 1778

I have received, Sir, the letter that you did me the honor to write to me on the 24th instant, as well as the memorial of the farmers-general concerning the American frigate Boston.¹ I have read that document with the greatest attention, but I confess to you that I was astonished that, in order to decide on the formalities to be observed with regard to a ship of war, there were cited only ordinances relating to the examination of merchant vessels. In my opinion, the question that has to be decided is most simple. Are the employees authorized or accustomed to examine foreign ships of war coming to our shores? In default of a law establishing the affirmative, the farmers-general ought at least to have quoted facts. Only a few months ago a Dutch frigate named the Thetis stayed in the port of Toulon; I would ask whether their employees examined it or not. The reply to be made to this question will serve as a decision with regard to the American frigate Boston, the two cases being perfectly analogous.

Moreover, Sir, I think it right to point out to you that our ships of war are not examined in foreign ports, and that if it were wished to subject them to this, the King would not allow it. You will easily judge that His Majesty cannot refuse reciprocity without committing a manifest injustice.

With regard to the Treaty of Commerce that the King has concluded with the United States, it contains no stipulation relative to the matter in question, and I know of no other treaty in which any mention is made of it.

Sir

Brig *Patience*¹ Bres Road

July 30th 1778.

Nothing but the Distressed Situation of my family, and fearing a french prison at the begining of a War should oblige me to be So troublesome to you and your officers. The State of my family is truly deplorable. About Eighteen Months ago I had a brig seized from me with many other things and Sold, being almost my all I then got y^c Lord Chatham, my first voyage became A Victim to y^c Ranger,² If I am sent to prison Will certainly ruin me. I have a large family Eleven in number, a Wife, Children, and grand children all females except one Boy of Six years of age; the father of the grand Children in y^c american Service I have Nothing left to maintain them but my labour. If I am confind my family must become a public charge, God of his infinite mercy grant it may not be the case. I am now near sixty years of age and sending me to Prison will by no means serve the States of america, and will forever destroy my family. There has not been any masters of american Vessels not armed detained in England. Cap. Whipple³ generously sent the Masters away for a dutch Ship that he brought to Nantes. I have not heard of any men being served by the americans as we have been by Cap. Jones, since this unhappy War, I pray God of his infinite Goodness put an end to it. As you have been always very kind I flatter myself you will do what lies in your power for me and that you will be kind enough to speak to the Agent in my favor. I need not point to you y^c ways I might be set free. I have also a boy an apprentice a relation of my own I should be glad to get with me, if it can be done. your interest in this affair, I am in hopes, will set me free, for which, and my distressed family shall ever pray for your wel fare I am &c

W^m Stroughan

P.S. After you left the Ranger as well as before, I was always willing to contribute to the safety of y^c Ranger, particularly when it looked so bad coming thro' y^c North Channel. Cap. Jones asked me what he should do, as he was afraid to go through the South Channel and thought he should not be able to go to y^c Northward. I told him I could take y^c Vessel into Lough Endal⁴; he then promised me to set me free.⁵ If D^r franklin knew his promises and my age I think he would give orders for my clearance.⁶

Docketed: "Copy of a Letter from a prisoner/to Lieu' Simpson/Brest July 30./1778." This was the third time Straughan had petitioned the commissioners for his release. There is no evidence that the commissioners acted on Straughan's petition. The first petition, and discussion of the second, are at Christian Stenger and William Straughan to the Commissioners, 18 May 1778, in Adams Papers 6: 134–35 and 135n.

1. John Paul Jones used the captured brig Patience as a prison ship.

2. For a discussion of the capture of Lord Chatham by Continental Navy ship Ranger, commanded by Capt. John Paul Jones, see Jones to American Commissioners, 27 May 1778, in NDAR 12: 756.

3. Captain Abraham Whipple, who commanded the Continental frigate Providence.

4. Loch Indaal, or Lochindall, a bay or sea loch of the isle of Islay, Scotland.

5. Straughan had also noted in an earlier petition that he gave Jones "knowledge when on the Coast of Ireland" that "Contributed for the Safety of the Ranger." Adams Papers 6: 134. However, Straughan did not mention here his failed escape attempt with Christian Stenger, former master of Ranger's prize Dolphin, on 21 May. See David Cullam to Jones, 21 May 1778, in NDAR 12: 738.

6. Straughan's earlier requests for release had been directed to the American Commissioners in France rather than Lt. Simpson of Ranger. Benjamin Franklin was one of the three American commissioners.

d'une Lettre du S^r. Sieulanne a M. Le Docteur Franklin

A S^{te}. Croix de Teneriff Le 30 Juillet 1778

Monsieur

J'ai L'honneur de vous informer que Le Cap^e. G. Cunningham commandant Le Ba-teau Americain La Revenge, armé en Course, ayant pris & mené a L'Isle de Palme une des Canaries, Le Brigantin Anglois La Comtesse de Moreton,¹ il me proposa de le conduire a la Martinique. Apres avoir obtenu l'agrement de mon Consul dans ces Isles et avoir fait mes Conventions avec le Ca^{pe}. Cunningham, je me transportai a La Palme ou je pris Possession du d. Brigantin. Mais, Monsieur, comme j'étois a appa-reiller Le 19 de ce Mois, Le Gouverneur de la Palme² envoya une Chaloupe armée a mon bord pour m'obliger d'aller Lui parler, ce qu'ayant fait, il me dit qu'il venoit de recevoir l'Ordre de M. Le Marquis de Tavallosos, Commandant general de Canaries,³ d'arreter mon Batiment et il fit en Consequence descendre a Terre Les Voiles et les Boussoles. Je lui demandai les Raisons d'un Procedé aussi violent, il me repondit que non seulement il avoit Ordre de m'arrêter, mais même Le Cap^c Cunningham; celui ci avoit appareillé un peu avant moi et il etoit encore a La Vuë du Port; Le Gouverneur ajouta qu'il falloit que je m'adresse au General; Je passai en Consequence a Teneriff et m'etant présenté au d. General, il m'accabla d'Injures, moi et Le Cap^c Cunningham, nous traitant de Brigands. Je lui repondis que j'ignorois ce qu'il pouvoit avoir contre ce Capitaine, que ma Mission se bornoit a conduire La Prise dont il S'agit a la Martinique et que je venois Scavoir la Raison pourquoi il m'avoit fait arreter aussi ignominieusement; Il me dit alors d'aller trouver un Negociant Anglois etabli au Port de L'Orotave appellé M. Thomas Cologan. Ne Scachant a quoi cette Demarche aboutissoit, je fus rendre Compte a mon Consul de ce qui se passoit. Il me conseilla d'ecrire au d. S^c Cologan, qui me fit La Reponse dont je joins ici la Copie.⁴

Cette Lettre, Monsieur, developpe tout Le Mystère et il paroît que c'est par Re-presailles que j'ai été arrêté et que le Cap^c Cunningham devoit l'être. Je ne reflechirai point sur un Procedé aussy violent de la Part du General des Canaries; je me bornerai seulement a vous supplier de vouloir bien employer vos Bons Offices pour que la Cour d'Espagne oblige ce General a me payer tous Les fraix que ce Retard m'a occasionnés et qui peuvent etre évalués a cinq cent Piastres; attendu que mon Marché avec Le Cap^c Cunningham est par Traversée, avec huit hommes d'equipage et que je serai obligé de vendre a Perte une Portion de mon Chargement a La Palme, lequel consiste en Vin de Catalogne. Cette Somme pourra etre remise a M. Le Consul de France qui me La fera passer ou je me trouverai, Selon Les Prieres que je Lui en fait et Les vis que je Lui donnerai. Je pense aussi, Monsieur, qu'en bonne Justice, ce General devoit etre tenu de repondre de tous les Evenemens, jusqu'a mon Arrivée a la Martinique, puisqu'il ma causé un Retard de prés de trois Semaines. Le Chargement & Le Navire sont estimés Seize mille Piastres ou Soixante quatre mille Livres.

Pour ce qui regarde, Monsieur, L'insulte fait au pavillon, je suis persuadé que vous en obtiendrez Satisfaction et qu'il ne sera plus exposé dans ces Parages a des semblables Attentats. J'espere aussi que vous excuserez mon Importunité, mais j'aurois crû manquer aux Egards que je dois au Cap^c Cunningham qui a bien voulu me confier ses Intèrets, Si j'avois omis de vous faire part de cette Circonstance. J'ai L'honneur d'être [&c.]

[Translation]

Copie of a Letter from Mr. Sieulanne to
Dr. Franklin
Santa Cruz, Tenerife, 30 July 1778

Sir

I have the honor of informing you that Capt. G. Cunningham, commanding the American Boat the Revenge, armed as a cruiser, having taken and led to the isle of La Palma, one of the Canaries, the English Brigantine The Countess of Moreton,¹ proposed that I conduct it to Martinique. After having obtained the consent of my Consul in these islands and having made my agreement with Capt. Cunningham, I traveled to La Palma, where I took possession of the said Brigantine. But, Sir, as I was setting sail on the 19th of that Month, the Governor of La Palma sent an armed sloop alongside me and obliged me to go speak to him. This having been done, he told me that he had just received the Order of the Marquis of Tavallosos,² Commanding general of the Canaries, to stop my Ship, and he, in Consequence, had the Sails and Compasses sent ashore. I asked him the Reasons for such a violent proceeding, he answered me that not only had he an Order to stop me, but also Capt. Cunningham; the latter had sailed a little before I had and he was still within sight of the Port; The Governor added that I needed to address myself to the General; I passed in Consequence to Teneriff and having presented myself to the said General, he overwhelmed me with insults against me and Capt. Cunningham, treating us like Brigands. I answered him that I was ignorant of what he could have against the Captain, that my Mission was limited to conducting the Prize in question to Martinique and that I came to find out the Reason why he had had me stopped so ignominiously; He told me then to go find an English Merchant established at the port of Orotava called Mr. Thomas Cologan. Not knowing where this proceeding would end, I gave to my Consul an Account of what had passed. He advised me to write to the said Mr. Cologan, who gave me the Response the Copy of which I enclose.³

This Letter, Sir, develops all the Mystery and it appears that it is for Reprisals that I have been stopped and that Capt. Cunningham is their objective. I shall not Reflect on a Proceeding so violent on the Part of the General of the Canaries; I shall restrict myself solely to requesting you to kindly employ your Good Offices so that the Court of Spain may oblige this General to pay me all the expenses that this Delay is costing me and which can be valued at five hundred Piasters; considering that my agreement with Capt. Cunningham is by crossing, with a crew of eight men and that I shall be obliged to sell at a Loss a Portion of my Cargo at Palma, which consists of Catalan wine. This Sum could be remitted to M. the French Consul who will have it sent me where I will be; According to the Requests that I made to him and the notices I shall give him. I also think, Sir, that in good Justice, this General ought to be held responsible for all eventualities, until my Arrival at Martinique; because he caused me a delay of nearly three Weeks. The Cargo & the Vessel are valued at sixteen thousand Piastres or Sixty-four thousand Livres.

In this regard, Sir, the insult made to the Flag, I am persuaded that you will obtain Satisfaction for it and that it will no more be exposed in these Regions to any similar outrages. I hope also that you will excuse my Importunity, but I would have believed it a failure in the Regards that I owe to Capt. Cunningham, who has been pleased to confide to me his Interests, If I had omitted to inform you of this Circumstance. I have the honor to be [&c.]

REAR ADMIRAL SIR HUGH PALLISER TO EARL OF SANDWICH

[Extract]

[At sea in the English Channel, 31 July 1778]¹

. . . From the French stealing away in the night, I conclude they are very much damaged and got into Brest the next day or the day after.²

As to the surmise that they were to go to Quiberon Bay, I think it is very probable if they had any intention to embark troops for a descent in England or Ireland; but I am inclined to think it very uncertain whether they will now attempt to carry such scheme into execution, after they have seen our strength and felt some hard blows. However, I have no doubt but they will refit their fleet with all possible expedition, and reinforce it to the utmost of their power; and if you have not very authentic accounts of the Toulon squadron's being otherwise destined I shall believe they will join the Brest fleet, and that they will exert every nerve to dispute with us the superiority in the home seas.³ This I shall believe to be their plan until I know for certain that the Toulon squadron or some ships from Brest are sent abroad. Therefore, though it will certainly be right to have a squadron ready for the East Indies or elsewhere, yet I shall hope it will be thought not right to detach any ships before they do.

Even with this cautionary measure for keeping their grand fleet in awe, I fear if many frigates do not speedily arrive from America our coasts and trade will be exposed to frequent mischief from squadrons of frigates and privateers. Much more caution is necessary in conducting this than any former war; hence your Lordship will perceive that I consider the operations of the French in this war will be regulated by the schemes, informations, and advice of some able and well-informed British traitors and rebels.

Sandwich Papers 2: 129–32.

1. The editors of Sandwich Papers assign this date based on an endorsement on the letter by Earl Sandwich that reads in part: “Supposed to be July 31st 1778.” Palliser, one of the Lords of the Admiralty, commanded one of the divisions in Adm. Augustus Keppel's Western Squadron.

2. Palliser was referring to the conduct of the French fleet after the battle off Ushant on 27 July.

3. Five French ships of the line under the Chevalier de Fabry had left Toulon at the end of July. They did not join the French fleet at Brest but remained in the Mediterranean. Lacour-Gayet, La Marine Militaire, p. 311.

Madrid 31, July. 1778.

In a Conversation yesterday with M Floridablanca,¹ he mentioned to me his having remitted to M. Escarano² two Subjects, more of Discussion than of Complaint. One was the Demand threatned to be made upon the Governour of Louisiana, by the Governor of Florida relative to a Vessel carried into New-Orleans by the Americans.³ He thought the Manner in which this Demand was made, rather violent, considering that the Spanish Governour had given great Proofs of his Friendship and Humanity by his Reception of the British Subjects who had been driven out of fort Mischak⁴ on the Missisipi. . . .

SONG FROM FORTON PRISON

The Widdows Lamentation for the Loss of her Husband in America. N^o. 22.—

All true hearted Britons that passing along—
I would have you draw near and attend to my song—
O what terrible news do we hear every day—
Of the lives that are lost in North America—

'Tis enough for to pierce a heart of a stone—
To hear the poor widdow and Children to mourn—
When our armies they arrive on America's Ground—
What cutting and slashing and blood runing down—

The Son slays the Father or the Father the son—
While the blood all in streams down the furrows To run
And never a man that's willing to yield—
Till one or the other lies dead in the field—

Many thousand brave men have already been slain—
Left their wives and their Children in grief to complain—
While our Enemies all around us advantages take—Which causes Britannias poor heart for to ake—

To think that her Children is slain every day—
And all sorts of business begins to decay—
When they once were united we never did fear
The threats of proud Spain nor lofty Monsiear

They never was able against us to stand—
We always could beat them by sea or by land—
But now our armies get weak every day—
Pray God put a stop to this terrible fray—

What a shocking affair so much blood their should spill
While Sawney¹ is scheaming his Coffor to fill—
O Heaven be kind and bring things about
And send master Sawney be put to the rout—

And let him gon back to the Highlands away
And all things be settled in North-America
So now to conclude these few line I have pen'd
Let us pray that these troubles be brought to an end

Pray God be their relief comfort and send them relief

COMMISSIONER OF THE PORTSMOUTH NAVY YARD, BARON SAMUEL HOOD, R.N., TO LORDS COMMISSIONERS OF THE ADMIRALTY

Gentⁿ Ports^o. the 1^t of August 1,778.¹
I judged it proper to acquaint you that a French Ship, cut out from Sheepscut² on the Coast of America by the Rainbow's Tender, arrived at Spithead last night, and has on board 50 Masts, two of which are of 26 inches. And that on the 17th. of last month, she fell in with Six Sail of Adm^l Byron's Squadron. The Albion was dismasted; the Grafton, Royal Oak, and Bedford, each a lower Mast sprung, those Ships having separated from the Rest of the Squadron. These six Ships were spoke with in Latitude 46.. Long. 41.³

JAMES MOYLAN TO THE AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE

Honorable Gentlemen

L'Orient 1st. August 1778

The Frigate Boston sails this morning with her three prizes.¹ Captain Tucker happen accidentally to have mention'd to me that he had your orders to take on board some goods here, but that as the wind was fair, he determin'd not to wait for them. if it is a disappointment to you, w^{ch}. in any manner can be remedied by loading them on a french bottom, I can give you freight for them on reasonable terms, by one that I shall dispatch in all the next month for America²

I am much obliged to M^r Franklin for having advanced M^r Ogden Eight Guineas, in that gentleman's way hither, w^{ch}. sum I desire my friend in paris to pay him.³ I wou'd have acknowledged that favor sooner, if M^r. Ogden had acquainted me therewith before. I have the honor to be [&c.]

Nantes 1^{er}. August 1778

The foregoing are Copyes of our last, Which hope soon to hear are safe come to your hands, since have received your esteemed favor of 9th. June last wherein is acknowledged receipt of Sundry letters from us.¹

this by your ship Adams Cap^t L. Turner, incloses Bill of Loading and Invoice of her Cargo amounting to L.56235.7. which sincerely wish may arrive safe & give entire satisfaction[.] account of Said vessells disbursements shall forward you by the first opportunity after the different bills are Collected, we also inclose you Cap^t Turner receipt for the money advanced him for use of his vessell, account sales of the Adams Cargo net proceeds L.55052.0.3 we sold this Cargo immediately after the ships arrival, with Conditions to be delivered which has evited sundry heavy Charges, as you may observe by comparing this account sales with others further inclose you additional accounts of disbursements for the Penet & Nantes² amount^g to L2114.0^o 11^d. Acco^t sales of y^e flaxseed & potash p. the Nantes N^t proceeds L. 22345.17.4, Acco^t of an Error in the snow Penet's General Acco^t of Disbursemnts L. 346.7.11. in the states favour likewise inclose you a translation of Recules de Basmaerin Raimbaux et Cie Accounts,³ respecting the business they were charged with by Gruel & C^o in your states account,⁴ first account of Disbursements against the Brigantine Tirranicidé Cap^t Harri-dan⁵ amot^g to L. 19177.19.1 Second acco^t of Disbursements against the sloop Bunker hill Cap^t Clark⁶ amo^g to L. 7612.2 third acco^t sales of the sloop Bunker hill & Cargo N^t proceeds L.27618.18. Invoice of the Tirranicides Cargo amount^g to L. 35010.6.11. they forwarded you by said vessell.

Cap^t Turner received from us £.1400. .. for his primage as p. inclosed receipt he tole us that was the sum agreed upon with the board of war, and Mess^{rs}. Cripps & Mey⁷ wrote us to pay him as p. his agreements & not pay any attention to the bill of Loading that mentioned primage as customary which would amounted to full double the sum; it is necessary to inform you that Cap^t Turner had several passangers & some Indigo belong^g to them on freight, which he received the money for & said would settle with the board for the same. three muids⁸ of salt in bulk with that of y^e Cargo belong^g to Captain Turner which he bought & paid for.

Cap^t Proctor & Cap^t James (who were unfortunately taken in the two mast ships.)⁹ arrived here some time ago, we advanced them money to y^e amounts of L1770 p. inclosed receipts, the former went on board the frigate y^e providence,¹⁰ the latter is waiting to take the command of a small vessell now on the stocks, building by two Gentlemen that embark in her for your state—we sincerely wish the whole of y^e foregoing papers may be found Just on examination & give all satisfaction, in your last we with pain remark the dissatisfaction of your having mention'd some time before what Balance remain'd as due to your state as you believed by the remittances, made & the money advanced our unfortunate Pliarne Exceeded what we shipt & paid for your state, this now serves to inform you that M^r. Pliarn never sent any account of y^e money he received from you which left us intirely in the Dark on that point;¹¹ further observe, it gives you no uneasiness to find we are in advance for that or a much considerable amount as it would be but as small part of y^e advances stipulated in your contract with our Mr Pliarne we are happy to think our advances give you no uneasiness, and be assured we will go to the utmost of our abilities in Serving your State which we have given a small proof of but hope you will not think this is done by agreement of contract, as we never received original or Copy, therefore are quite ignorant with the Contents.

With regard to your accounts not being sooner forwarded, we Can only give for reason that M^r. Gruel (who contracted the whole business whilst in the partnership) treated you as he did all others that were pleased to intrust us with their business, by neglecting it in a most shamefull manner, dayly with astonishment we are obliged to see, in what an indolent manner he transacted the business, and are much afraid shall feel the consequence thereof untill the character of our present partnership is established & Known in what manner we dispatch business, which if not already taken place hope will soon be, after our M^r. Penet's arrival in the Continent, who leaves this in a small Vessell of ours, for the southward, that will sail with the fleet under convoy of the providence & two other Continental frigates,¹² who sees them off this coast, should M^r. Penet be fortunate enough to arrive, will think it his duty to wait on your respectable board of war so soon as possible.

With regard to the political affairs of Europe, must reffer to the french papers we forward you by this vessell, unless it is the King of france's proclamation giving liberty to fit out privateers & letter of marks against the English, further that a french frigate had already taken five english vessells which are all safe in different ports of this Kingdom,¹³ the french fleet left brest y^e 8 ultimo consisting of 32 ships of y^e line, frigate &^{ca}¹⁴ the English fleet went out some little time after, but have not had yet heard of the two fleets meeting which is looked for every moment what the consequence may be, cannot tell, but they assure for certain that our fleet has orders to attack admiral Keppel.¹⁵ we remain with most Sincere your most obedient [&c.]

(N^o. 16)

Whitehall, 5th. August 1778.

Sir,

Since my Letter to you of the 1st. of last Month¹ I have received your dispatch N^o. 52 and have laid it, with the Inclosures,² before The King.

The Measures already taken by His Majesty for the Security of the Province under your Government, and of which I fully informed you in my last, will, I hope, have the Effect to give entire Safety to the Inhabitants, and by removing their Apprehensions of Danger from any future irruption of the Rebels induce them to return to their Settlements and proceed in the Cultivation & Improvement of their Lands.

I have carefully read over the copies of the Correspondence that passed between the Spanish Governor of Louisiana and the Commanders of His Majesty's Ships Sylph and Hound contained in the Minutes of the Council and other Inclosures in your dispatch³; and althô a most unjustifiable partiality and Encouragement to His Majesty's Rebellious Subjects may easily be discovered in the Governor's proceedings, yet there by no means appears in those Papers, sufficient cause for taking so rash a Step as that you meditated, of seizing Spanish Property or committing any Act of Hostility against the King of Spain or His Subjects, and I am to signify to you His Majesty's Express Command that you take every Precaution to prevent any Violence or Injury being done to His Catholick Majesty's Subjects, or affording any just ground of Complaint of an Infraction on our part of the Peace and Friendship which so happily subsists between the Two Crowns.

The free Navigation of the Mississippi is undoubtedly the common Right of the Subjects of Both Nations, but the Jurisdiction and Property are, as Don Galvez states it, intirely in Spain, from the Belize to the Iberville, and from thence to it's Source on the left hand side only of a Line drawn thro' the Center of the River.—The Property of His Majesty's Subjects seized within those Limits, the Governor professes to restore, and I see by Cap^t. Nunn's Letter to you of the 14th. April⁴ that M^r. Campbell's Brig⁵ was actually given up.

The Countenance however which you say has been shewn to the Rebels at New Orleans and their being allowed to retain or dispose of there, the Effects they have plundered The King's Subjects of within His Majesty's Jurisdiction is a most offensive and injurious proceeding, & I shall not fail to communicate such part of your Letter and the Inclosures as relate to that Proceeding to Lord Weymouth, and I doubt not his Lordship will instruct His Majesty's Ambassador at Madrid to make the strongest Representations to the Spanish Court upon the unwarrantable Conduct of It's Governor, and I shall hope that orders will be given for restoring to His Majesty's Subjects such part of their plundered Effects as may be found within the Spanish Territories. I am &c^a

Sir,

I have received your Dispatches of the 23^d May, and 5th and 13th June numbered 3 and 4,¹ and had the Honor to lay them before The King, and I have the satisfaction to acquaint you that the Disposition you made for evacuating Philadelphia appears to His Majesty, for the reasons you State, to have been very proper, and I shall hope to hear from you in a few Days that the Army under your Command passed throth the Jerseys without any material Molestation, and is arrived in safety at New York.²

But I am not so easy in respect to the Expedition ordered to the West Indies, as the Season will be so far advanced before it may be expected the Troops can Sail from New York, that I fear they will be exposed to the Danger of a Hurricane on their Voyage, and to that of the Autumnal Diseases upon their Arrival; I make no doubt however that every possible Precaution will be used to guard against both Dangers, and your giving the Command to an Officer of Major General Grant's³ prudence and Ability, was taking the most likely means to insure Success, his appointment therefore has met with The King's Approbation.

I am very anxious to learn the Effect of the Commissioners Letter to the Congress,⁴ I flatter myself a Treaty will take place, and that We shall be at liberty to act with our whole Force against France.

My Circular Letter of this day⁵ will inform you of the Resolution His Majesty has come to, of issuing Letters of Marque for seizing & making Prize of their Trading Ships, and you will see by the enclosed Gazette Extraordinary that an Action has happened between His Majesty's Fleet under the Command of Adm^l Keppel and the Brest Squadron.⁶

Should however the Congress, and all the revolted Provinces, refuse to treat with the Commiss^{rs}, the Attention due to the Safety of other Parts of the King's Dominions, and the Security of our Trade, will make it necessary to deprive them of the means of making Naval Expeditions, of fitting out Armed Ships; and therefore I trust you will, in concert with the Commander of His Majesty's Ships, lose no time in carrying into Execution such Measures as you and he shall concur in as most proper for effecting that Important Service

The Recovery of South Carolina & Georgia in the Winter, or even the latter Province if the other requires a greater Force than can be spared, is an Object of much Importance in the present State of things, as from thence our Islands in the West Indies might draw Supplies of Provisions and Lumber, for the want of which they are now greatly distressed, and His Majesty's Ships would have Ports of Safety to Wood and Water in, and refresh their Crews. But as in my most Secret Letter of the 8th of March⁷ I fully stated what appeared to me to be the most advantageous manner of employing the Troops under your Command in case a French War had not intervened, it is unnecessary for me now to say more upon that Subject than to acquaint you that it is still The King's Wish, if the Rebellion continues, that in your future Operations you should adopt such parts of the Plan suggested in that Dispatch, as in the present Circumstances you shall think may be executed with Success. I am [&c.]

P.S.

I have the pleasure to send you Enclosed herewith His Majesty's Commission under the Great Seal of England, appointing you Commander in Chief of all His Majesty's Forces in the Colonies lying upon the Atlantick, and a Warrant under His Majesty's Sign Manual authorizing you to appoint to Vacancies therein, on which I beg leave to congratulate you.—

CAPTAIN JOHN PAUL JONES, CONTINENTAL NAVY, TO GENERAL GEORGE WASHINGTON

Honor'd Sir,

Passy near Paris August 6th. 1778.

As the Scene of War by Sea is now changing from America to Europe I have been induced to give up the Command of the American Ship of War Ranger and to Continue for some time in Europe in Compliance with the request of the Minister of the French Marine in a letter to our Ministers Plenipotentiary at the Court of Versailles.⁻¹

I will not intrude on your Excellencies time even by attempting to pay you the respect which you so Justly Command:-

The intention of this letter is only to beg your Acceptance of two Epauettes with which it is accompanied, and which my Friend M^r. Williams of Nantes² had undertaken to forward[.] I expected to have had the honor of delivering this little present into you own Hands—but not having that Satisfaction if in the meantime I can render you any Acceptable Services in France I hope you will Command me without reserve, being with Sentiments of perfect Esteem Honored Sir yours &c⁻ Honoured Gen^m.

This oppertunity permits me to Acquaint you that when I saild from the River of Providence we recieved a severe Cannonading from the two Frigates that Attacked¹ but I flatter myself they had nothing to boast of as the fire was returned with Interest. One shot from the Enemy hulld us between wind & water and the sails, Rigging &c was much damaged but amid all this fire not a man was killed or wounded. The Lark was fairly along side when she recieved three of our Broadships and immediately sheered off not being able to Stand the w^t of our metal the 4th Day was chased by a two Decker² but out saild her from the wind exceeding fast.

In Latt 45.00 Long 10.00 took a Brig laden with 143 Pipes of Wine bound from Porto Port to West Chester she Arrived Safe at St Martins Isle of Rhé and has been sold by the Con Ag^{t3} Arrived in the River Loire harbour of Paimbeuf about 10 Leagues from Nantes the 29th of May and immediately dispatched an Officer Agreeable to my Orders to wait on the Honble Comm^s Resident at Paris.

Having found by experience that my masts & rigging were by no means Sufficent to carry and Croud sail have had such Alterations made as I beleive will stand my Ship at Present is manned with 250 men and Boys included about 80 of them are green Frenchmen whom I have picked up here. The Honble Commissioners have sent me Orders to join the *Boston*⁴ and put to sea with all possible expedition and together with the Ranger proceed for America In consequence of this I yesterday saild from the River Nantes in Company with the Boston having been wind bound ever since the 25 July

The two frigates are now bound for Brest to join the Ranger Cap^t Simpson,⁵ Cap^t Jones being destined for another service agreeable to the Letters of the Honble Commissioners which inclosed you a Copy of⁶ and you will then be able to determine with greater Accuracy than myself why Captain Jones is not in the *Ranger*⁷ have onboard at present a Considerable quantity of Goods belonging to the Continent a Copy of Invoice inclosed⁸

My ship is very healthy & hope it will remain so there has been an engagement between Admir Kepple and the French Fleet which had the Better I cannot tell,⁹ but by what I can learn they have six Captains confined for Cowardice at Brest¹⁰ before this Comes to hand doubt not you will have a Compleat A/c [account] of all those transactions. There is no public Declaration of War as yet between England & France but both Sides Reciprocally Capture every thing which it is possible to find—

The tedious method of doing Business in France has detained me longer than I could wish Am in hopes I shall Arrive at Some port in America by the last October where I cannot tell Pray oblige me with informing M^{rs}. Whipple that I am well Remember me to all enquiring friends

10. Louis-Phillipe-Joseph de Bourbon, duc de Chartres, was removed from command because of his incompetence and failure to obey orders during the battle, but, as a prince of the blood, given the face-saving honorary position of colonel-general of hussars. Chef d'escadre Etienne-Pierre vicomte de Rochechouart, flying his flag in Duc-de Bourgogne, and Capitaine de vaisseau Bartélémy-Achille-Evard de Trémigon, commanding Alexandre, were called on to justify themselves: Both ships of the line had been absent from the battle, having failed to rejoin after separating from the fleet the night of 23–24 July. The tribunal found Rochechouart not culpable and admonished Trémigon. Capitaine de vaisseau Denis de Trobriand de Keredern was replaced in command of the 50-gun ship Amphion, which had returned to Brest during the battle because of battle damage. O. ARTHUR CAYLEY TO WALTER SHAIRP

Extract of a Letter from M^r Arthur Cayley to M^r Walter Shairp dated Archangel 10th August 1778—

Inclosed I hand you a Copy of a Letter received from Captain Richards giving an Account of the Havock made among the English Ships, & I fear many more will share the same fate; as I hear the Privateer¹ still hovers on the Coast; she mounts 20 Guns, 10 Swivels, has 150 Men, & Cruizes between the North Cape and Warehouse.² As the Trade between this Place & England is very considerable, could not you, my worthy Friend, obtain a Convoy to come here next Year, with the Ships as is done in other parts of Russia, or must it be petitioned for by the Russia Company in London.³ I pray you will write to London on this Subject, for without some protection is granted, I fear few English Ships will come here next year; we have already had thirty three English Ships & many more expected.⁴ The Trade of this Place is Principally in Tar, part of which is bought for Government account.

Copy, UKLPR, Adm. 1/4136, no. 102. Shairp was the British consul at St. Petersburg. This copy of his letter was forwarded to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty by William Frazer, Under Secretary of State for the Northern Department, on 25 September 1778.

3. The Russia Company, more formally the Muscovy Company, was an organization of English merchants trading with Russia.

4. In forwarding this letter, James Harris, Envoy-Extraordinary in St. Petersburg, discounted the intelligence saying he believed the report “premature” and opined that Shairp had displayed “too much Zeal” in forwarding it immediately on receiving it and thereby had unnecessarily “occasioned an Alarm” in the Russia Company. JOURNAL OF CHARLES HERBERT

[Mill Prison, Plymouth, August 1778]

10. This afternoon the guard came in and turned us all out, and locked the doors, which aggravated many, who wanted to be in prison—some reading, some writing, some cyphering, and some studying navigation. Some went and picked the locks, and opened the doors, and went in; upon this the guard came in again and turned us all out and placed a sentry at the prison doors. Two men, out of spite, went to fighting, and it took most of the guard to separate them. Soon after, another fight happened, and about the same time the commissioner came into the yard, and ordered one of them to be sent to the Black-hole.¹ In all this disturbance, the officers of the guard appeared very mild and calm; they are officers in the militia.² Most of those that have been on guard since we have been guarded by the militia,² have behaved very well towards us, and very much like gentlemen, as they are chiefly gentlemen of fortune. Today the other three men were brought back that made their escape from prison on the 30th of July, in the evening.³

Herbert, Relic of the Revolution, pp. 153–54.

1. In his account of this incident, Jonathan Haskins wrote that the prisoners were turned out into the yard “in consequence of a favour Asked of the Comm^r By Capt. [John] Lee Yesterday Viz. to have the Liberty of being of being or going into the Yard more, but did not mean to have the door Locked. This Affair caused a great Disturbance & the Guard Came in to Quell us to no purpose; The doors were Opened after about One hour. Our Agent [Agent in Charge of the Prison William Cowdry] always Endeavours to Grant those favours we Ask in such a Manner as no ways to Answer the Desired Effect." MeHi, Jonathan Haskins Journal.

2. In an earlier entry, Herbert identified the militia guards as being from Cornwall, Somersetshire, and Devonshire. Herbert, Relic of the Revolution, p. 144.

3. On the escape, see Jonathan Haskins Journal entry of 31 July, above. There these three men are identified as Henry Lunt, Thomas Barker, and Robert Swan.

4. The identity of the “Gentleman” has not been established. He was apparently there to collect the silver belonging to Lady Selkirk that had been taken in a raid on the Selkirk estate by crewmen from Ranger and that Jones had promised to return in a letter to Lady Selkirk of 8 May 1778, above. However, according to Jones’ biographer, the plate was not returned until after the war. Morison, Jones, pp. 154–55.

M. le C^{te}. Dorvilliers, M. m’a informé de refus que le no^c. Nicolas Edouin de Grandville Patron de Canot abord du Dauphin royal a fait de Se prêter à l’évasion d’un des prisonniers anglois retendus sur le Batiment du Capitaine Jones,¹ malgré l’offre que celui-ci lui avoit faite de 15. Louis. Cette preuve de fidelité et cet acte de desinteressement m’ont paru mériter recompense. Sur le compte que j’en ai rendu au Roi, S. M. a trouvé bon quil fut accordé au d. Edouin une petite gratification, et elle a laissé M. Dorvilliers le Maitre d’en fixer le montant. Dans le cas où le dit Edouin seroit à Brest, vous voudrez bien en l’absence de M. Dorvilliers la lui faire payer telle que vous le jugerez à propos, et me marque ce à quoi vous l’aurez fixée, afin que je donne des ordres pour la faire passer en depense et Si ce Patron de Canot est à la mer, à son retour vous voudrez bien communiquer ma Lettre a M. Dorvilliers en fin qu’il est remplitte l’objet. J’ai l h. d’être &c.

Copy of the Letter from the Minister to the Marquis de la Prévalaye, Naval Commander at Brest, of 10 August 1778.

M. le Comte d'Orvilliers informed me, Sir, of the act of the said Nicolas Edouin of Grandville, Coxswain aboard the Dauphin Royal, who prevented the escape of one of the English prisoners held aboard the ship of Captain Jones,¹ in spite of the bribe of 15 Louis that was made to him. This proof of loyalty and this act of selflessness seem to me to deserve a reward. On the basis of what I told the King, His Majesty deems it fit that the said Edouin be given a small bonus, and he has allowed M. d'Orvilliers to fix the amount. If the said Edouin is in Brest, in the absence of M. d'Orvilliers, please have the amount set as you see fit and indicate to me at what level you will have fixed it so that I may order the funds obligated. If this Coxswain is at sea, please pass my letter on to M. d'Orvilliers when he returns so that he may settle the matter. I have the honor to be [&c.]

I received, Sir, the letter you wrote me concerning the cargo of the English prize led into Brest by the American privateer Ranger.¹ The decay of the goods endangers, as you noted, the guarantee on the advances made to this privateer from the King's warehouses. The sale has been postponed by difficulties on the discernment of rights and the introduction of the types of goods which are forbidden, since they come from England; however, I am engaged in making arrangements that should ease the sale of the prizes of American privateers, this is still causing some delay in the sale of the Ranger's. DAVID HARTLEY TO BENJAMIN FRANKLIN

[Extract]

Dear Sir

Golden Square [London] Aug 14 1778

I writ to you as long ago as the 14th of the last month to tell you that the administration here had given their consent to the exchange of prisoners at Calais, and that they w^d agree to give any ship on your part a free passport from Brest to Calais upon your sending me a similar assurance that any British ship going to Calais for the purpose of the Exchange sh^d have free entrance without molestation, and free egress with the prisoners in Exchange. I have again received a confirmation of these assurances from the board of admiralty here, and we are now waiting for your answer, after the receipt of w^{ch} the exchange will be forwarded with all expedition¹. . . . Believe me ever yours most affec^{tely}

CAPTAIN JOHN PAUL JONES, CONTINENTAL NAVY, TO EDWARD BANCROFT

My Dear Sir

Brest August 14th 1778.-

Contrary to my intention when I left Passy I visited L'Orient on my way in Order to see the *Epervier*¹ and the rest of the young Squadron lately destined &^c—the Epervier's Bottom has been newly cleaned—It is a Small Brigg of about an hundred Tons—will perhaps sail as well as almost any other Vessells of its dimentions; and is pierced for fourteen Guns two of which I was told are larger than the rest—these two I take to be Nine pounders—the rest may perhaps be Six pounders—I could not see the Guns nor the Shott—but if the Vessell carries that Metal it is as much as ever any thing of the same dementions did.— the others (a Jersey prize Sloop and a Schooner) are very insignificant things indeed—and I found no favorable Account of their Sailing tho' I was particular in my inquiries of Moylan² and others—The Epervier is not Rigged and is in no other forwardness than what I have already mentioned—I was told besides that there were Commanders and Officers on the Spot who were appointed for all the three—

I arrived here on Monday the 10th.—The Lively is given away in Consequence of an Order from Monseig^r. De Sartine to Mons^r. De la Prévalâye³—I am not sorry for this as the Lively is Old with a double bottom and Sails so heavy that the Captain⁴ of the Iphégenie has Assured me that he, with only two Topsails set, had the advantage while the other spread all Sail.—

The Command of the Alert is also bestowed in Consequence of the aforesaid Order, which is General,⁵ and altho' Monseig^r. De Sartine appeared of Opinion that this Vessell could not be got ready in time to Join the Young Armament at L'orient—Yet its Sails are now bent—No mention is made to this Hour of my name to any or either of the three cheif persons here all of whom I have reason to think very much my Friends—These Gentlⁿ. tell me that if any mention of me is made in any Letter or Order from Monsie^r. De Sartine the Alert shall notwithstanding the present appointment be Immediately put under my Command and direction.— I do not wish to be thought a Knight of the Windmill⁶ but I wish to be active and am ready to proceed even in that little Boat to Join the Ships at _____ and afterwards as directed—I need not observe that it will now be impossible to reach the place at first thought of before the 20th.— but the Bird may not perhaps fly away on that very day—or if it should have flown it is not unlikely that others as good may be Caught at places not far distant from that Spot.— If that project is or should be laid aside—I am willing to use my best endeavours with the Epervier and Alert—and in that Case I could wish it might be agreeable for Captain Hinman⁷ to Join me and to Command one of them—this you may first hint to him as from yourself.— If he does not eagerly embrace the proposition you may tell him from me that the Command of the Ranger is at his Service—and having my free Consent he may claim that of the Commissioners as a matter of Right—Simpson is ungrateful as well as disobedient—he reports that I am turned out of the Service—and that the Commissioners have in reward of his merit given him my place and made him a Captain—that M^r. Williams's letter to him is a falsehood—and that mine in his favor to the Commissioners was involuntary—and by their Orders to avert worse Consequences to myself⁸—Now seated upon his high horse he has not even deigned to see me nor to send me a message—and since he has thus broken and is thus breaking his Parole am I not reduced to the necessity of bringing him to a Court Martial—This he has no apprehension of else would he be in a different tone. However there are now in France exclusive of myself a Sufficient number of American Officers to form a Court and I am determined to demand it⁹—His Parole is in my possession and it would now be unpardonable in me to give it up.— It has been represented to the Commissioners as unreasonable—Let it speak for itself in the within Copy to which is added my letter of the 16th July in his favor to the Commissioners—much has been said about my having confined M^r. Simpson a few days on shore.—¹⁰ I will answer every objection to that measure by asking One Question—Where a Ship of War is in the port of a Foreign power in Alliance—If a General revolt and neglect of Duty should take place among the Officers & Men should other methods of restoring Order & Subordination prove ineffectual—would it not be the indispensible tho' painful Duty of the Captain to ask Assistance from that power in Alliance?— This Case was Literally mine.— And M^r Simpson being a Prisoner of State charged with the disobedience of positive Written Orders—did not Surely lessen his Crime by Associating with a Crew under such Circumstances instead of Confining himself in his Stateroom unconnected he had General intercourse with the Crew throughout the Ship upon Deck as well as in Cabin &^c. Below—They were taught to regard him as the defender of their Rights—the most essential of which was that as they were “Americans Fighting for Liberty”—“the Voice of the People” ought to over-Rule every measure of an Arbitrary Foreign Captain which was not Sanctified with their general Approbation.—¹¹

The People at this time had no Money—and as my Signature had been dishonored by the Commissioners I had none to give or lend them¹²—I expected every moment that an Order from the Minister would wrest every Prisoner of War out of my hands and set them at Liberty unless I could get the Drake ready to send them away—yet “the Voice of the People” being against working they all hands left off and went below repeatedly before my face, which no Officer endeavoured to prevent.—¹³ The Prisoners of War were immediately to be put on board the Drake of course it was necessary to remove M^r Simpson.— To have sent him on board the Ranger would have been a dangerous expedient which would not have lessened the Contagion—And as I had been obliged to apply for a French Guard to Secure my Prisoners of War to whom could I with Confidence commit the Care of a Prisoner of State—I had little time for reflection and in Compliance with the Advice of General D’Orvilliers¹⁴ I removed M^r Simpson onboard a Guard Ship in the Port Called the Admiral where they Confine even the first Officers in the French Navy—here he had to himself a good State Room with Liberty to walk where he pleased in the Ship, so that his exchange was for the better not for the Worse—Yet so perverse was his disposition that he sent word to the Officers and Men that “he was put into a Prison”—This together with a representation which was made to me by Gen^l. D’Orvilliers of the insecurity of the State Room Window induced me to Comply with his further Advice by realizing M^r Simpson’s message—during his residence in this Ship & on Shore he wanted for nothing and I defrayed his expenses out of my private purse—

Before I was sent for or expected to be sent for the last time to Paris I communicated something of this matter, in Confidence to Doctor Franklin—Yet I wish you if you think fit to Communicate to him the whole of this letter—together with the two inclosed, which I hope he will not disapprove.—¹⁵ I beg you to present my grateful respects and tell him that I would have Addressed something to the same effect particularly to himself but am afraid of giving him too much trouble as it will answer the same purpose this way—but I will write to him perhaps frequently in Consequence of his Permission—

I presume that our Friend Williams is not now with you otherwise I would write to him—The Drake is Advertized for Sale on Wednesday next—but I don’t think the Sale will then be Concluded—The Revenue Gentry will not permit the porter to be landed nor to be Sold except for Exportation—If I can get over this difficulty I will procure some for the Commissioners and for you.—

Present my best respects to Mons^r. De Chaumont to Madame and the good Family¹⁶—I shall allways entertain a grateful Sense of their Polite Hospitality—He is one of the few Men in the World to whom I am willing to be under Obligation—and I make no Scruple to inform him that I hope to have his attention in my Absence—I believe I will write to the P__ de N__¹⁷ soon.— It will be necessary for M^r Edward Mays¹⁸ to be present here at the Court Martial as an Evidence—and as I doubt not but that Monsieur^f de Sartine would choose to send him out again with me—it may suit his purpose to come directly down here where he will receive his Prize money—He can come down either with Captain Hinman or by the Stage—Doctor Franklin knows him— If I had funds in Europe I would have no objection to Risque something in the Drake and in the Porter both of which would Answer I believe in Virginia.— This letter is of an immoderate length but Apology would make it still longer, therefore I am without a Compliment very Sincerely.— My dear Sir yours &c—

1. For the French government’s offer to lend the French Navy cutter Epervier to the United States, under Jones’s command, see Jones to Gabriel de Sartine, 17 July, above.

2. James Moylan, Continental Commercial Agent in Lorient, France.

3. The Royal Navy frigate Lively of 20 guns had been captured off Brest on 10 July by the French Navy frigate Iphigénie. Command was awarded to Pierre Dimas Thierry, later marquis, de la Prévalayé.

4. Armand Guy Simon de Coëtnempren, comte de Kersaint.

5. H.M. sloop Alert, a 10-gun vessel, was captured in the English Channel by the French Navy frigate Junon on 17 July 1778.

6. Jones was referring to Don Quixote, the character in the novel of the same name by Miguel de Cervantes. Because of his actions, including attacking a windmill, he was an object of derision.

7. Capt. Elisha Hinman, former commander of Continental Navy ship Alfred, had recently arrived in France after escaping from Forton Prison.

8. As seen in his letter to the American Commissioners in France of 15 Aug., below, Midn. Benjamin Hill was the source of these reports concerning Lt. Thomas Simpson. Nothing more is known about the letter from Jonathan Williams Jr., to Simpson.

9. A court-martial for Simpson was never held.

10. On the controversy concerning Jones’ decision to imprison Simpson in a French prison at Brest, see the American Commissioners in France to Jones, 25 May 1778, and Simpson to the American Commissioners in France, same date, in NDAR 12: 747–51.

11. Simpson, like many of the crew of Continental Ship Ranger, was from Portsmouth, New Hampshire; Jones was a native of Scotland and had not lived long in the United States.

12. Jones is referring to the fact that several of his monetary drafts on the American Commissioners in France had been disallowed. See the American Commissioners in France to Jones, 25 May 1778, NDAR 12: 747–48, and Jones to the Commissioners, 27 May, NDAR 12: 755–61, and 3 June, above.

13. Jones was referring to disposition of the prisoners taken in H.M. ship Drake by Jones and the Ranger. He feared they would be ordered released by the French Minister of Marine. See Jones to the American Commissioners in France, 9 May 1778, NDAR 12: 680–81.

14. Lt. Gén. Louis Guillouet, Comte d’Orvilliers, Commander of the French naval squadron at Brest.

15. Bancroft apparently did pass the letter and the enclosures, one of which was a long memorandum on Jones’s case against Simpson.

16. Jacques Donatien Le Ray de Chaumont, Marie-Thérèse Le Ray de Chaumont, and their family.

17. Charles Henri Nicolas Othon, Prince de Nassau-Siegen.

18. While it would appear that Jones was suggesting Edward Myer, a boatswain’s mate, he undoubtedly was referring to Lt. Jean Meÿer, a Swedish volunteer who served under Jones in Ranger. While Myer signed the 15 June petition of the crew against Jones, Meÿer had warned Jones of a mutiny plot before the Whitehaven raid and saved Jones from being stranded on the beach, as members of the crew intended, once the raid was over. Benjamin Franklin Papers 27: 255n.

CAPTAIN JOHN PAUL JONES, CONTINENTAL NAVY, TO THE AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS IN FRANCE

Gentlemen

Brest August 15th. 1778

I have now been five days in this place since my Arrival from Passy—during which time neither seen nor heard from Lieutenant Simpson¹—But M^r. Hill,² who was last Winter at Passy and who sailed with me from Nantes, informs me truly—that it is generally reported in the Ranger and of course throughout the French Fleet and on Shore—that I am turned out of the Service—and that you Gentlemen, have M^r. Simpson my place with a Captains Commission.— That my letter of the 16th of July³ to you was Involuntary on my part, And in Obedience only to your Orders, to avert dreadful consequences to myself. These, Gentlemen are not idle illgrounded conjectures, but melancholy Facts.— Therefore I beseech you, I conjure you, I demand of you to afford me Redress—Redress by a Court-Martial—to form which we have now a Sufficient number of Officers in France with the assistance of Captain Hinman exclusive of myself—The Providence and the Boston are expected here very Soon from Nantes and I am certain that they neither can nor will depart again before my friend Captain Hinman can come down here—and it is his unquestioned Right to Succeed me in the Command of the Ranger.⁴

I have faithfully and personally supported and Fought the Dignified Cause of Human Nature ever since the American Banner first waved on the Delaware and on the Ocean. This I did when that Man did not call himself a Republican but left the Continent and served its Enemies—and this I did when that Man Appeared Dastardly Backward and did not Support me as he ought.⁵

I conclude by requesting you to call before you and examin for your own satisfaction M^r. Edw^d. Meyrs⁶ who is now at the House of the Sweeish Ambassador and who having been with me as a Volunteer can and will I am persuaded represent to you the conduct of the officers and Men towards me both before I left Brest & afterwards in the Irish Channell as well as my conduct towards them. NEW JERSEY MARITIME COURT STATEMENT, 18 FEBRUARY 1778

February 18, 1778.

To whom it may concern:

THE boat or vessel known by the name of Lewis's Mill Boat, which was lately condemned by a court of admiralty in State of New-Jersey, and sold by Publick Vendue in the city of Burlington, was in September last employed in the continental service for carrying cloathing from Philadelphia to Trenton, and from thence was ordered by the commisaries to return with publick stores to that city, calling at Bristol for further directions; but by the villainy of the skipper the vessel was run into a dock in Philadelphia on the 26th September last (the day on which the enemy arrived there) from whence she was taken an hour or two afterwards by a party of Gloucester county militia, together with all the publick stores (having no other goods) on board, which stores were also condemned for the use of the captors.

The above is a true state of facts as they appeared on the trial.

BOWES REED, PRO. REG.

APPENDIX B

ACCOUNT OF CAPTURE OF MAST-SHIP MARQUIS DE LA FAYETTE BY H.M.S. RAINBOW, CAPTAIN
SIR GEORGE COLLIER, R.N.

[Extract]

Understanding from intelligence given by a fishing vessel near the Island Mahagan,¹ that another large ship, laden with masts for France, was ready to sail from the River Sheeps-cut (up which the Rainbow went the preceding year, as has been related,)² Sir George [Collier] cruised off the mouth of it many days, in hopes of intercepting her, keeping at such a distance by day from the shore as not to be discovered, and in the night causing a small armed schooner, with a detachment of seamen and marines, to keep near the river, that she might not escape in the dark; after waiting for about a week, every body's patience was almost exhausted, and Sir George began to imagine his object had by some means escaped him: he took the resolution therefore to send eighty determined men, under command of Lieutenant Haynes (who had so gallantly conducted himself in the former enterprise), in the armed schooner³ a few miles up the river (followed by the Rainbow), that some intelligence might be procured whether the mast-ship was still there, and to attack her if it could be done with a prospect of success.

The schooner accordingly set forward in the night, and the Rainbow followed slowly towards the entrance of the river; but when the ship was within a mile of the mouth of it, and entangled amongst breakers and shoals, a thick fog came on, and occasioned great danger of her being lost; it continued the remainder of that day and night, and with very little wind: Providence, however, was again gracious in protecting the Rainbow from the perils that surrounded her, for she got at a greater distance from the land without having struck upon any of the sunken rocks.

The following morning being clear and bright, the Rainbow again steered towards Sheeps-cut River, to support and protect the little tender; as she proceeded, a very pleasing sight presented itself; a lofty ship with top-gallant-sails appeared coming out, and the little schooner close by, escorting her!

They soon joined the Rainbow, and Sir George had the satisfaction of finding he had at last got possession of what he had been so long looking for: she was a large French ship, called Le Marquise de la Fayette, laden with masts, spars, plank, &c. bound to Nantz; had a tier of guns, and was about 500 tons burden.⁴ Lieutenant Haynes acquainted the Commodore, that soon after the schooner had got into the river, the thick fog had obliged him to anchor; that observing a boat passing, he had sent and seized her, but could get no information from the men, except that there was a ship at anchor above the schooner, but they could not tell what she was, or where she was bound: the lieutenant had hardly done examining the prisoners, when another small boat approached, hailing the schooner, and asking where they came from? Mr. Haynes with great presence of mind told them he was a privateer called the True Blue, from Boston; with this the men seemed satisfied, and pulled away, but lost themselves (as it afterwards appeared) in the fog; the boat actually belonged to the Marquise de la Fayette, who was at anchor near them; the French captain⁵ being very vigilant, had kept a man during the fog at the mast-head, to look round; the vapour being very dense and low, did not prevent the upper part of the schooner's masts from being discovered, though they could see nothing of the hull; alarmed at eve[r]y new appearance, and hearing they had a pretty vigilant enemy in the offing (for the Rainbow had been discovered by the fishing boats), the French captain sent his pilot (who lived close to the place) to learn what the strange vessel was, and return back. He accordingly came within hail, and received the answer before related. The deception, however, by no means passed, for the pilot was too cunning to be taken in by it, when he rowed away: whether he really lost his way in returning to the ship (as he said) or whether he thought it most prudent to take care of number one (which is not unlikely) is a doubt, but it is very certain he got on shore, and never returned to communicate his suspicions to the French captain.

Lieutenant Haynes having learned from the prisoners nearly where the ship was at anchor, proceeded towards her through the fog, and was not discovered until they were very near her; a minute after brought the schooner alongside, when the English marines, with bayonets fixed, presented a terrible sight to the affrighted people upon deck, amongst who was Mr. Bethune, a Boston gentleman of considerable property, who was taking the opportunity of going to France, on his way (as he said) to England.⁶

It was a proof of the good discipline the men were under, that a whole line of loaded arms were presented, at the same time the seamen boarded with pistols and pole axes, yet not a drop of blood was shed, and the prize taken without any mischief done.

Sir George ordered this ship to proceed to Halifax with proper people to navigate her, but on her way there she was chased by a rebel cruiser, who followed her to such a distance off Nova Scotia, that the officer who had charge of her thought it would be most prudent, as the wind was fair for England, to proceed there; he accordingly had a good passage, and arrived safely at Portsmouth with the prize.⁷

Sir George Collier, after this, went again to Townsend harbour,⁸ and procured some water and a few sheep for the sick men. He then continued his cruise, destroying and taking several rebel privateers and other prizes; the Rainbow had impressed the coasting vessels with so much terror, that they could not be prevailed upon to come out of the harbours, and the rebellious inhabitants of Boston were put to great inconveniences for fuel, as the price of fire-wood advanced (from few coasters arriving) most enormously.

5. The master of Marquis de la Fayette was Durif de Cazeneuve.

6. Probably George Bethune, a Boston merchant and justice of the peace.

7. On 14 Aug., Williamson's Liverpool Advertiser, and Mercantile Chronicle reported the arrival of the Marquis de la Fayette, "formerly the Johnson, of this port."

8. "Townsend harbour" is at Boothbay, Maine.

D, UKLPR, Adm. 36/7857.

1. The date on which the prisoner first appeared on the ship's books.
2. The rank or rating of the prisoner.
3. "D, DD, or R" stands for "Discharged, Discharged Dead" or Run (i.e., deserted)."
4. During the first days of Apr., H.M.S. St. Albans was in company with H.M. frigate Ariel, Capt. George Brisac, commander. UKLPR, Adm. 51/828, part 4. Presumably this entry means that the prisoners were from an unidentified schooner captured by Ariel.
5. According to the log entry for St. Albans of 9 Apr., Capt. Richard Onslow sent "a Flag of Truce [vessel] to Hampton & another to Baltimore with Prisoners for Exchange." UKLPR, Adm. 51/828, part 4.
6. The prisoners were transferred to H.M.S. St. Albans from H.M. frigate Richmond, Capt. John Lewis Gidoïn, commander.
7. H.M. bomb Thunder, Lt. John Graves, commander.
8. H.M. frigate Emerald, Capt. Benjamin Caldwell, commander.
9. Continental Navy Frigate Virginia, Capt. James Nicholson, commander, was captured on 31 Mar. by H.M. frigate Emerald after running aground in Chesapeake Bay. For more on Virginia's capture, see Nicholson to the Continental Marine Committee, 2 Apr., above.
10. Joshua Barney was actually first lieutenant on the Continental frigate Virginia.
11. What this entry undoubtedly means is that these Continental seamen were sent to the H.M.S. Preston instead of the prison ship Judith, as the copyist first assumed they would be.
12. French merchant snow François, Jean Étienne La Fontaine, master, captured on a voyage from Cape François to Virginia. UKLPR, Adm. 32/334/16.
13. In a log entry of 12 Apr., Capt. Onslow noted that the barge of St. Albans captured a schooner "load'd with Fish." This schooner was presumably L-Sourz. On 14 Apr., Onslow recorded in the log that St. Albans was sailing in company with H.M. frigate Emerald, "the Henry & Ann Transport, the Virginia, Union, François, Lesource, Prizes." UKLPR, Adm. 51/828, part 4.

Personal names of obscure individuals are spelled as they appear in the documents. Brackets enclosing proper nouns indicate other names by which the entity was known, alternative spellings found in documents, spellings used in previous indexes in this series, educated guesses as to the correct spelling, or, in the case of geographical locations, variant spellings or the modern name. Bracketed numerals after the names of officers in the Royal Navy are numerals employed in the Navy Record Society's The Commissioned Sea Officers of the Royal Navy 1660-1815, edited by David Syrett and R. L. DiNardo (Aldershot, England: Scolar Press, 1994) to distinguish among naval officers of the same name. Names beginning with Mc or M' are alphabetized as if spelled Mac, and the abbreviation St. is treated as Saint. The name of a vessel's captain or master, when known, appears at the end of the vessel's entry, and the name of the vessel commanded appears at the end of each ship captain's or master's entry.

The COLONY of RHODE ISLAND is situated between the 41st and 42^d Degrees of N. Latitude, and between the 71st and 72^d Degrees of W. Longitude, in the most healthy Climate in North America, to which many Inhabitants of the Southern Colonies and West India Islands resort in Summer as a place of health. The Winters are severe, though not equally so with that of the other Provinces, but the Summers are delightful, the violent and excessive heats to which America is in general subject, being allayed by the cool and temperate breezes that come from the sea.

It enjoys many advantages. Has several large Rivers, and one of the finest Harbours in the World.
 Fish of all kinds are in the greatest plenty and perfection. The Horses are honey and strong, the Cattle and Sheep are much the largest in America, the Butter and Cheese excellent, and every necessary of Life in Abundance.

They have no established form of Religion, Episcopalian, Independent, Quakers, Anabaptists, Sab-tarians, Jews, Moravians and all other sects what so ever have liberty to exercise their several professions.
 Newport, the chief town is situated upon an Island, of about 6 Miles in length, and 1/2 in breadth, called Block Island, whose the Province takes its name. It is the Capital City and contains nearly 3000 Inhabitants. It has a Town House, Market House, Library and a spacious Parade, but there is few private Buildings in it worth notice.
